GENERAL PREFACE.

In the WARWICK SHAKESPEARE an attempt is made to present the greater plays of the dramatist in their literary aspect, and not merely as material for the study of philology or grammar. Criticism purely verbal and textual has only been included to such an extent as may serve to help the student in his appreciation of the essential poetry. Questions of date and literary history have been fully dealt with in the Introductions, but the larger space has been devoted to the interpretative rather than the matter-of-fact order of scholarship. Aesthetic judgments are never final, but the Editors have attempted to suggest points of view from which the analysis of dramatic motive and dramatic character may be profitably undertaken. In the Notes likewise, while it is hoped that all unfamiliar expressions and allusions have been adequately explained, yet it has been thought even more important to consider the dramatic value of each scene, and the part which it plays in relation to the whole. These general principles are common to the whole series; in detail each Editor is alone responsible for the plays intrusted to him.

Every volume of the series has been provided with a Glossary, an Essay upon Metre, and an Index; and Appendices have been added upon points of special interest, which could not conveniently be treated in the Introduction or the Notes. The text is based by the several Editors on that of the Globe edition: the only omissions made are those that are unavoidable in an edition likely to be used by young students.

By the systematic arrangement of the introductory matter, and by close attention to typographical details, every effort has been made to provide an edition that will prove convenient in use.

ADDENDUM: SHAKESPEARE'S STAGE IN ITS BEARING
UPON HIS DRAMA, by Prof. C. H. HERFORD, Litt.D.

INTRODUCTION.

I. LITERARY HISTORY OF THE PLAY.

THE Tragedy of Macbeth, like most of Shakespeare's later plays, was not printed separately in quarto form during his lifetime. It first appeared in the collected edition The Folio text of 1623. issued in 1623, seven years after the poet's death, by John Heminge and Henry Condell. Here it stands between Julius Cæsar and Hamlet. In the preface to this edition, known as the First Folio, Heminge and Condell claim to have taken great care to present an accurate text of the plays, "absolute in their numbers as he conceived them". But it would not be safe to put overmuch confidence in this boast. The text of Macbeth, in particular, is very unsatisfactory. It is full of printer's errors. Verse-passages are printed as prose, or cut up into irregular lines without regard to metre. And in many places the original sense has been reduced to nonsense.¹ Some of these mistakes were corrected in the Second Folio of 1632; some have been emended by the ingenuity of Theobald and his fellow commentators; others are perhaps beyond the reach of scholarship.

It is improbable that the version of the play from which the First Folio text was taken was in the state in which Shakespeare left it. Opinions differ as to the extent of the modification which it may have undergone. The Folio text a stage version. The Clarendon Press editors think Middleton and Macbeth. that it had been freely touched up by Thomas Middleton. They profess to be able to trace his hand in certain rhyming tags and passages "not in Shakespeare's manner". Attempts in a similar direction have been made by Mr. F. G. Fleay.¹ Middleton was a younger contemporary of Shakespeare's, and wrote for the King's Company between 1615 and 1624. If it was found necessary during that period to make any alterations in Macbeth, it would have been natural enough to intrust the task to him. But I cannot believe that it is possible to disentangle such alterations from the original stuff of the piece; and, in spite of Coleridge, a criticism which can attribute the Porter's speech in act ii. sc. 3 to any other than Shakespeare appears to me strangely untrustworthy.² It is not unlikely, however, that the First Folio was printed from a copy of Macbeth which had been 'cut' and 'written up' for stage purposes.³ This theory would account for the unusual shortness of the play;⁴ for certain discrepancies in the incidents;⁵ and for the number of incomplete lines, which may very well be due to the excision of speeches or parts of speeches.⁶ I think also that there has been some tampering with the witch-scenes by the introduction of a superfluous personage, Hecate, and of a few lines lyrical in character and incongruous to the original conception of the weird sisters. This condemnation would cover act iii. sc. 5, and act iv. sc. 1. ll. 39-43; 125-132. These passages are very likely the work of Middleton, for they closely resemble in style certain scenes in a play of his called The Witch.⁷ This play was discovered in MS. in 1778, and its importance was at once observed, and perhaps exaggerated, by Shakespearian critics. Steevens assumed that The Witch was written before Macbeth, and inferred from certain parallels between the two plays that Shakespeare borrowed hints from his fellow-dramatist. A

² See Appendix F.

³ Similar instances of such stage-versions are probably to be seen in the Folio Hamlet and the First Quarto of Romeo and Juliet.

saner scholarship has, however, led to the conclusion that The Witch was probably not written before 1613, and consequently that Middleton was the borrower. Having written his own play, he may have interpolated a few lines in a similar style into Macbeth, with the object, perhaps, of introducing a musical element. It is noteworthy that in the stage-directions to two of the doubtful passages appear the titles of songs which are given in full in The Witch.¹

Three possible dates have been suggested for the original production of Macbeth. The latest of these is 1610. It depends upon the testimony of one Simon Forman, an astrologer. Forman was in the habit of keeping a manuscript book, and entering in it his play-house impressions. He records a performance of Macbeth at the Globe on April 20, 1610. From the description he gives, it is clear that what he saw was Shakespeare's play, and that in its main outlines it was identical with the version in the Folio.² But there is no proof that Forman was at the first performance; revivals were frequent on the Elizabethan stage; and the weight of evidence is in favour of an earlier date. This can hardly be later than 1607, for in The Puritan, published in that year, occurs a manifest allusion to Banquo's ghost. It is in act iv. sc. 1: "Instead of a jester we'll have a ghost in a white sheet sit at the upper end of the table". It is worth noting that in the same year William Warner added to the new edition of his Albion's England a history of Macbeth, as if public attention had been recently called to the subject.³ On the other hand, the constant reference throughout the play to James I. makes it practically certain that it was produced after his accession in March 1603. The interest taken by this king in witchcraft is notorious; the vision of Macbeth in act iv. sc. 1 is a scarcely veiled tribute to one who traced his descent from Banquo; and a passage in sc. 3 of the same act is as obviously inspired by the 'touching for the king's evil', revived by James, and claimed by him as hereditary in his house. With less certainty we may push the limits of time a little closer. The incident of the thane of Cawdor has been compared with the famous conspiracy of the Earl of Gowry and his brother in 1601.¹ The bestowal of Cawdor's honours on Macbeth recalls the investiture of the dignities of Scone, formerly held by Gowry, upon Sir David Murray, who had been forward in saving the king's life from the conspirators. This event took place on April 7, 1605.² In 1605 also is recorded a curious performance given before James during a progress at Oxford. On reaching the gates of St. John's College he was met by three boys, representing the nymphs or Sibyls who had foretold the reign of Banquo's descendants. These delivered orations in Latin and English.³ It is very possible that this performance suggested the writing of Macbeth, and that it was produced on the occasion of the visit of the King of Denmark to England in July 1606. Oldys, the antiquary, has a story of a letter sent by James I. to Shakespeare, and it has been conjectured that it was a command to write this play. On the whole, the production of Macbeth at the Globe may be provisionally put in 1606. This date is accepted by the majority of scholars, and it is consistent with the style and thought of the play. Malone further supports it by tracing in act ii. sc. 3 various allusions, to the trial of Garnet the Jesuit on March 28, to the low prices of that year, and to the French hose then fashionable.⁴ It should be noted, however, that some critics have doubted the authenticity of this passage, and that such allusions can easily be introduced in the process of 'writing up' a play.

³ The Warner coincidence by itself proves nothing, for his narrative might have suggested the subject to Shakespeare.

Mr. Fleay, whose laborious and valuable investigations give him a claim to be heard, thinks that the play produced in 1606 was only a revision of an earlier work dating from 1601.¹ In that year the Lord Chamberlain's (afterwards the King's) Company was in disgrace at court, ^{A possible earlier} and travelled in the provinces. There is no ^{version in 1601.} reason to doubt the tradition that they went as far as Scotland;² and Mr. Fleay thinks that Macbeth was originally written for performance before King James at Aberdeen in the winter following the Gowry conspiracy. He supports his view by pointing out that the play as a whole is more closely related to Julius Cæsar and Hamlet, its companions in the First Folio, which belong to about 1601, than to *Lea*r and Othello, which are later. He also suggests that the description of Cawdor's execution may have been inspired by the fate of the Earl of Essex. But Cawdor cannot well be both Gowry and Essex, and it is very doubtful if the players, whose disrepute at home was due to their connection with Essex' conspiracy, would be likely to make any allusion to that event.³ The whole question of the extent to which personal and political allusions may be found in Shakespeare's plays would repay careful study. There is a tendency to be hazardous with such speculations. I think that the critic who identifies Hamlet and Gertrude with James I. and Mary Queen of Scots has been hazardous.

² There is a difficulty in supposing that there is any allusion to the Gowry conspiracy in Macbeth. Another play on the subject, produced by the same company in 1604, got them into trouble. See Fleay, Life and Work of Shakespeare, p. 152. Was Macbeth an apology?

From the Restoration to the present day Macbeth has been universally popular upon the stage. Pepys saw it eight times between 1664 and 1668. But the Macbeth ^{The Restoration} of the Restoration was hardly Shakespeare's ^{Versions.} play. The process of adaptation begun by Middleton was continued in accordance with the taste of the time; the musical element was still further extended; and the whole became rather an opera than a tragedy. Two moments in this change are marked by the printed versions of 1673 and 1674. The first of these follows, in most respects, the text of the Folios. Middleton's song, "Come away, Hecate", is inserted in full in act iii. sc. 5; and two other songs for the witches have been added at the end of act ii. scenes 2 and 3 respectively. It has been conjectured that these songs are by Sir William Davenant, Shakespeare's godson. In any case, Davenant is responsible for the edition of 1674. This contains the three songs already printed in 1673, together with that of "Black spirits and white", also by Middleton. But moreover, the whole text of the play has been mutilated and perverted; hardly a scene escapes; everywhere the rhythm and thought of the original has been obscured by bald additions and alterations of the adapter's own.¹ It was for this travesty that Lock's beautiful music was composed, and in this that Betterton won such conspicuous success. It held the stage until 1744, when Garrick appeared in a version which was very nearly Shakespeare's. It was at this time that Mrs. Pritchard made a reputation as Lady Macbeth, which has only been overshadowed by that of Mrs. Siddons. It need hardly be said that every actor of distinction since Garrick's day has essayed the part of Macbeth.

2. SOURCE OF THE PLOT.

For the outlines of the story of Macbeth Shakespeare had recourse to a book from which he had already drawn the materials for his plays on English history. This Holinshed's Chronicles. was the great folio Chronicle of England and Scotland, by Raphael Holinshed and others, first printed in 1577, and afterwards, in the revised form which the poet used, in 1587. Shakespeare follows with some closeness the details of the reigns of Duncan and Macbeth as given in Holinshed's picturesque prose. The extent of his indebtedness may be gathered from a study of the passages quoted in Appendix C. But he has interwoven with the continuous narrative incidents taken from other parts of the same chronicles. The chief of these is the account of the midnight murder of Duncan. This is evidently based on that given by Holinshed of the murder of Duncan's great-grandfather, King Duffe, by Donwald, the governor of his castle, and his wife. Shakespeare has also worked in some of the striking features of traditionary witchlore. Much of this, in a time of plentiful witch-trials, was no doubt matter of common knowledge; but the poet may possibly have consulted Reginald Scot's Discoverie of Witchcraft (1584), or King James the First's curious little tract on Demonologie (1597).¹

To come back to Holinshed—the chronicle of Macbeth there given is derived from the Latin Scotorum Historia of Hector Boyis, Boethius, or Boece (1527). This was translated into Scotch by John Bellenden, archdeacon of Moray (1536), and Holinshed may have used the translation as well as the original.² Boethius in his turn had borrowed from Fordun, a chantry priest of Aberdeen, who wrote a Chronica Gentis Scotorum in the 14th century.³ It need hardly be said that the narrative common to all these chroniclers is legend rather than history. The labours of recent scholars have enabled us to reconstruct, shadowily enough, the historical Macbeth.⁴

In 1031 A.D. Malcolm II. of Scotland did homage to Cnut, King of England. He was accompanied on that occasion by two chieftains, under-kings, or maormors. The Macbeth One of these was Maelbaeða, Mealbeaðe, or of History. Macbeoðe, maarmor of Moray. It is thus that Macbeth first comes before us. He was the grandson of King Malcolm by his daughter Doda, who married Finnlæch. His own wife was Gruoch, daughter of Boete.

² See i. 3. 84, note.

³ Fordun's book forms the first part of the Scoti-chronicon (ed. Skene, 1871).

In 1032 Malcolm murdered the head of Gruoch's house, probably Boete himself, the motive being that Malcolm had only daughters, and Boete had a distant claim to the throne. In 1034 Malcolm died, and was succeeded by his grandson Duncan, cousin of Macbeth. Duncan at once named his son Malcolm Canmore to be his heir and Prince of Cumberland. Macbeth and Gruoch had therefore no good-will towards the reigning branch of the family. Duncan was an ineffective king; he invaded England unsuccessfully, and then entered upon a war with Thorfinn, the Norwegian Jarl of Orkney. Macbeth, who was commander of the army, took the opportunity to make common cause with Thorfinn, had Duncan murdered at Bothgouanan, 'the Smith's bothie', and in his own right or his wife's assumed the crown. His reign was one of order and prosperity; his bounty to the church became famous in Scotland, and even at Rome; the homage paid by Malcolm to England does not seem to have been renewed in his lifetime. But he had a formidable enemy and neighbour in Siward, Earl of Northumbria. In 1054, Siward, with the consent of Edward the Confessor and the Witenagemot, invaded Scotland by land and sea. A great battle took place on July 27, in which Macbeth was defeated and Siward's son Osborn and his nephew Siward were slain. Malcolm Canmore was proclaimed king, but Macbeth kept up the war in the north for four years, until he fell at Lumfanan in Aberdeenshire, in 1058. The resistance of his son or stepson, Lulach, was soon crushed. A slightly different version of some of the facts is given in Wyntown's Cronykell (bk. vi. ch. 18). Here it is stated that Gruoch was the wife of the murdered Duncan, that Macbeth was his nephew, and that Malcolm Canmore was illegitimate. Some scholars have thought that Shakespeare had Wyntown before him, as well as Holinshed.¹

Such is the actual substratum upon which the accretions of time and the genius of a poet have fashioned an eternal tragedy. In several important respects—Macbeth's relations to the Norwegians, the character of his reign, the rapidity of his downfall, the story diverges widely from the reality. The supernatural element is a characteristically mediæval addition, and it contains two bits of widespread folklore in the incidents of the birth of Macduff and of the moving forest.² Macduff himself, Banquo, Fleance, and their legendary connection with the Stuarts, have no sure place in history.

It is possible that Shakespeare was not the first to make a literary use of the story of Macbeth. Allusion has already been made to the interlude on the subject, played before James in 1605. Mr. Collier quotes two references which seem to point to a still earlier version. One is from Kempe's Nine daies Wonder (1600).³ It runs as follows:—"I met a proper upright youth, only for a little stooping in the shoulders, all heart to the heel, a penny poet, whose first making was the miserable stolen story of Mac-doele, or Macdobeth, or Macsometwhat, for I am sure a Mac it was, though I never had the maw to see it". The other is an entry in the Register of the Stationers' Company:—"27 die Augusti 1596. Tho. Millington—Thomas Millington is likewise fined at ijs vjd for printing of a ballad contrary to order, which he also presently paid. Md. the ballad entitled The taming of a Shrew. Also one other ballad of Macdobeth".⁴ I do not think we have the materials to say whether the 'ballad' here mentioned was really a stage-play or a ballad in the strict sense.

3. CRITICAL APPRECIATION.

It would appear that about 1601 Shakespeare lost his faith in the world. The light-heartedness of his earlier plays vanished; the laughter died away upon his lips, and the note of criticism, first struck, hesitatingly and, as it were, against his will, in Jaques, became dominant, swelling at last to the titanic denunciations of Lear and Timon. Attempts have been made to connect this phase in the poet's mental history with personal losses in the death of those dear to him, and, perhaps more justifiably, with the spiritual discouragement darkly shadowed forth in the Sonnets. However this may be, the clear fact is that for eight or nine years he devoted himself to the analysis of triumphant evil, setting forth in strong relief the failures, the disillusionings, the ineffectiveness of humanity. Temperament at war with destiny; the brute in man trampling upon the god—these are the themes he is compelled to illustrate. To this period, so far as we can fix their dates, belong all the great tragedies with the exception of Romeo and Juliet; and here too come the three 'bitter comedies', in some respects more sad than the tragedies themselves. The pessimistic attitude towards life was not indeed final with Shakespeare. For a while he was 'in the depths'—to borrow Mr. Dowden's happy phrase; but he rose to walk the heights; his last words proclaim the ultimate victory of good in the serene philosophy of The Tempest, Cymbeline, and The Winter's Tale. But while it endured, as Mr. Swinburne has pointed out in the case of Othello, his pessimism was deeper, more unchequered even than that of Aeschylus; there is no purification of Apollo shining in the distance. Nor can any better example of this mood be taken than Macbeth; the simplicity and grandeur of the presentment reveal clearly the deep underlying thought. It is a drama of man at odds with fate, driven from sin to sin and its retribution by external invincible forces. It will be the object of this Appreciation to show how the central idea thus stated moulds and informs the whole play.

A drama, like every other work of art, if it is to affect the spectator at all, must do so by means of some unity, some singleness of impression left upon him. It must be a whole, and be felt as such—not a mere ^{Dramatic Unity.} bundle of disconnected parts, however beautiful in themselves. Aristotle, analysing the masterpieces of Sophocles, laid down that a drama should concern itself with the development of a single action, in its beginning, middle, and end. The Unity of Action, so formulated, has been held at various times as a canon of literary orthodoxy, sharply dividing classicist from romantic schools of dramatic writing. And with it have universally gone two other canons—the so-called Unities of Place and Time; the one demanding an unchanged scene, the other an action continuous and complete in a period roughly equivalent to that of representation; at the most, in a single day. The Unity of Action goes, no doubt, nearly to the root of the dramatic problem; the Unities of Place and Time are less vital. They have their origin in the special limitations of the Greek stage, made rigid by the conservative element in the Greek drama, which never forgot to be a worship of Dionysus. The practice of Seneca, so influential among the scholar-poets of the Renaissance, introduced the Unities to the modern world, and it was not until after a severe struggle that they failed to impose their bonds upon the Elizabethan theatre. The best landmark of this struggle is Sidney's Apologie for Poetrie,¹ written about 1583, in which he supported the claims of the drama based on classical models against the looser romantic type, which popular poets and actor-playwrights were rapidly introducing. But the genius of Marlowe and of Shakespeare was on the side of romanticism, and the three Unities vanished with the Chorus and the Messenger and the other paraphernalia of strict Senecan doctrine. With the discarding of formalism arose the danger that the true limits of stage effectiveness might be forgotten. The Unities of Time and Place were little loss, but unless Unity of Action or something equivalent were retained the result would be chaos rather than drama. There are too many Elizabethan plays, in fact, which have very little dramatic unity at all. They are mere stories, romances, acted instead of read. But the conditions of unity in a story and in a play are not the same. A story permits of pauses, of turnings back, of the application of thought to win its secret. But in a play you are hurried on, the imagination moves rapidly from event to event, the links of unity must be transparent and obvious. It is the characteristic defect of the Elizabethan dramatist to neglect this distinction; immeasurably superior in all merely literary graces to the Sardous and the Ibsens of our day, in stagecraft, in the knowledge of stage effectiveness, he is as a child among them. Even Shakespeare is not exempt from this criticism. A modern manager producing King Lear must needs omit most of the Edgar story, and the little that is left only weakens the total impression of the play. A patient analysis in the study may find a unity by discovering that the same ethical idea is illustrated in the house of Gloucester and in the house of Lear; but in the theatre, where the unity must present itself, not be sought, such a process would be scarcely possible. I do not for a moment mean that Shakespeare was blind to the problem of unity. A comparison of two successive plays—deliberate pendants, one may well think—would at once dispel such an idea. In The Winter's Tale all the three Unities are deliberately and wildly outraged; in The Tempest they are most scrupulously observed. It is a confession of literary faith, the poet declares at once his power to handle and his will to disregard the formalities of classicism.

The objections that may be urged against King Lear do not apply to Macbeth. Here more than elsewhere Shakespeare has escaped the pitfalls of romanticism; here, not by direct imitation, but by the sympathy of genius, he has approached most nearly to the simplicity, the large sweep, of Aeschylus. Analysis of the play will show that a unity of impression is produced in it in no less than four ways.

In the first place, there is unity of action in the strictest sense. The whole interest is concentrated in the rise and fall of Macbeth and his wife. The episodes are few and slight, and can everywhere be shown to be necessary, by way of relief or contrast, to the emotions appealed to by the central story. Except in the tragedies, this particular kind of unity is rare with Shakespeare. Some of the comedies present as many as four or five stories, distinct threads of interest, woven together with consummate skill. Doubtless the poet felt that the intenser, more passionate feelings aroused in tragedy would not bear such rivalry. They cannot be laid down and taken up again with the change of scene.

Secondly, there is unity of philosophic idea. This is to be found in nearly every play; each is the medium of some great thought, some utterance of the poet's mind on deep questions, on love or kingship or character, or on the ultimate nature of the government of the world. And, in the light of this every character, every fragment of the plot must be read in order to grasp its full meaning. In Macbeth the central idea or theme appears to me to be this. A noble character, noble alike in potentiality and fruition, may yet be completely overmastered by mysterious, inexplicable temptation; and if he be once subdued a curse not to be forgone is for ever upon him. Temptation begets sin, and sin yet further sin, and this again punishment sure and inexorable. The illustration of this central idea is to be found in the rise and fall of Lord and Lady Macbeth. To them temptation comes in the guise of ambition, the subtlest form in which it can approach high souls. Of the supernatural setting in which it is exhibited there will be more to say hereafter; for the present note that once the murder of Duncan is committed there is never any hope of regress—sin leads to sin with remorseless fatality, until the end is utter ruin of the moral sense or even of reason itself; so that death comes almost as a relief, though it be a miserable death, without hope of repentance. Such a story is a proper theme for tragedy, because it depicts strong human natures battling with and overcome by destiny; had they been weak natures the disproportion between the forces would have been too great, and we should have had pathos and not tragedy. Starting from this central idea, the power of Shakespeare's treatment of it is most clearly manifest in the contrasted results of similar circumstances on two characters of different mould and fibre—one that of a man, the other of a woman; one realizing itself in action, the other in thought. When first Macbeth comes before us it is as a mighty warrior—he is spoken of as “valour's minion”, “Bellona's bridegroom, lapp'd in proof”; by performing prodigies of personal valour he has saved the country on one day from a civil and an alien foe. This is the noble side of him; away from the battlefield his greatness is gone, he sinks to the level of quite common men. Lady Macbeth herself expresses this in a passage which has been misunderstood:

Yet do I fear thy nature;
It is too full o' the milk of human kindness
To catch the nearest way.

“The milk of human kindness”—that is clearly not ‘a tender nature’, of which Macbeth never shows a trace, but rather ‘the commonplace ordinary qualities and tendencies of humankind’.¹ As for Lady Macbeth, it is not easy to accept the traditional stage view of her, originated probably by Mrs. Pritchard, as a sheer human monster, and the evil genius of her husband's soul. Hers is both a subtler and a nobler nature than his. Living a woman's solitary life, she has turned her thoughts inward; she, too, is a conqueror and has won her triumphs, not in war, but in the training of her intellect and the subjugation of her will. And withal, she is a very woman still:

I have given suck, and know
How tender 't is to love the babe that milks me;
and

Had he not resembled
My father as he slept, I had done 't;

and that despairing cry of horror: “Yet who would have thought the old man to have had so much blood in him”. Macbeth addresses her in language of love, and she too is wrapped up in him. Her immediate impulse to crime is ambition for her husband rather than herself, and in the banquet scene she stifles agonies of remorse to save him from blunders.

Thus the antithesis between the two is that between the practical life and the intellectual, and the effects of this difference are everywhere apparent. Macbeth is bold and resolute in the moment of action; he can kill a king, and he has a curious gift of ready speech throughout, which avails him to answer unwelcome questions. But when there is nothing to be actually done he is devoid of self-control; he cannot wait nor stand still; he becomes a prey to countless terrible imaginings; he is wildly superstitious. In all this Lady Macbeth is the exact converse; she has banished all superstition from her soul; she is strong enough of will to quell her husband's cowardly fears; she can scheme and plot, but she cannot act; she must leave the actual doing of the deadly deed to Macbeth; at the moment of discovery she faints.

The emotional effects of their crime are totally different on the pair. In Macbeth it is purely fear; there is no word of sorrow or sense of sin, only a base dread lest he should be found out and lose what he played for; if the fatal blow

Might be the be-all and the end-all here,
But here upon this bank and shoal of time, he is willing to "jump the life to come". In time this fear assumes terrible proportions; it drives him to new murders; he slaughters Banquo, he slaughters the family of Macduff; finally he becomes a craven and bloody tyrant; even his old love for his wife is swallowed up in selfishness; when her death is told him he cannot stay to mourn: "She should have died hereafter". Only in the last hour of battle does he for one moment recover something of his old brave spirit. With Lady Macbeth the curse works itself out, not in fear but remorse; it impels her husband to fresh deeds of blood: she has no hand in any murder but the first. But her sin is ever present to her: awake or dreaming she can think of nothing but that awful night, and the stain upon her hand and soul. At last her overtaxed brain breaks down; we witness her mental agony in the sleep-walking scene: "Here's the smell of the blood, still: all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand: oh! oh! oh!" And then she dies, a voluntary and most wretched death.

The other personages of the play are completely subordinate to the two central figures. Either they are mechanical, necessary to the incidents and episodes by which the plot moves on, such as Ross and Siward; or else they serve to intensify by character-contrast our conception of Macbeth's nature. It is noticeable that Lady Macbeth in this respect, as in others, is entirely isolated. But Macbeth sins both as subject and as lord; in the one relation Banquo and Macduff, in the other Duncan and Malcolm are set over against him. These are loyal, he is treacherous; these are king-like, he is a tyrant.

The witches, of course, come under another category. I take it that, wherever Shakespeare introduces the supernatural, he does so with a definite purpose; it is symbolical, pointing the fact that here, just here, we come upon one of those ultimate mysteries, which meet us everywhere when we scratch the surface of things. In A Midsummer Night's Dream, this is the meaning of the fairies; love is a mystery—"Love blows as the wind blows: love blows into the heart", sings the Nile boatman, according to Mr. Henley; it is indeed but the highest form of that primal mystery of attraction that pervades all matter and all spirit, and binds man to his god. In The Tempest, the magic of Prospero typifies the mystery of an overruling providence; and here Shakespeare has become his own commentator, for while this theme occupies the main plot, the under-plot of Miranda and Ferdinand contains the mystery of love; that of Caliban and the drunken sailors the mystery of intoxication. Coming back to Macbeth, the supernatural character of the weird sisters denotes the mystery involved in temptation; the mystery, that is, of the existence of evil. They do not tempt Macbeth; he was fallen before he met them; that is brought out clearly enough¹; they are only personifications of the real internal tempting motives. And, since in the mystery of evil is included the punishment of sin, as well as its origin, so the sisters appear to Macbeth a second time, to ensure his destruction by their deceitful promises.

We come now to a third kind of unity, of which again Shakespeare makes frequent use, but which consists in something so subtle and impalpable that it often defies analysis, and needs to be felt rather than demonstrated. Every reader must be aware that there belongs to each play an indefinable something, a note, a fragrance, a temperament, which distinguishes it from any and every other. We might call this unity of soul, and the last unity of mind, borrowing a hint from Mr. Pater, who speaks of "unity of atmosphere here, as there of design—soul securing colour (or perfume, might we say?) as mind secures form, the latter being essentially finite, the former vague and infinite, as the influence of a living person is practically infinite". So in Macbeth a thousand delicate touches serve to produce a sense of weird horror, rising to a height in the terrors of that unspeakable midnight murder.

Consider first how the key-note of the whole play is given by the appearance of the weird sisters amongst thunder and lightning in the first scene; then mark the awful chill that settles on us as we pass with the doomed Duncan to the gate of that castle where Lady Macbeth waits to welcome him.

This castle hath a pleasant seat; the air
Nimbly and sweetly recommends itself
Unto our gentle senses.

The irony of this only increases our forebodings, and the "guest of summer, the temple-haunting martlet" that nests upon the wall, gives an added touch of tragedy. Then night falls, a night fit for the deed to be done. It is pitch dark. "There's husbandry in heaven; their candles are all out", says Banquo. Evil things are abroad.

¹ i. 7. 48-51 must refer to some period before the opening of the play; and iii. 1. 75 also gives a hint of Macbeth's past life.

The night has been unruly: where we lay
Our chimneys were blown down, and, as they say,
Lamentings heard i' the air, strange screams of death,
And prophesying with accents terrible
Of dire combustion and confused events
New hatch'd to the woeful time: the obscure bird
Clamour'd the live-long night; some say, the earth
Was feverous and did shake.

Even as the guilty pair start about the preparations for their sin, the vaulted hall is lit by lightning and re-echoes with thunder; with them we "hear the owl shriek and the cricket cry". Innocent men are visited by strange thoughts and dreams.

There's one did laugh in 's sleep and one cried 'Murder';
That they did wake each other; I stood and heard them;
But they did say their prayers, and address'd them
Again to sleep.

Even such a nobly-strung soul as Banquo's is smitten with a strange sense of moral weakness and shrinking from the battle with temptation.

A heavy summons lies like lead upon me,
And yet I would not sleep. Merciful powers,
Restrain in me the cursed thoughts that nature
Gives way to in repose!

The most awful touch of all is that knocking of some unknown comer at the gate, which calls our minds, strained by the intensity of the situation almost into sympathy with the crime, back to the frightful realities of fact; and this effect is grimly enhanced by the drunken porter, whose fumbling for his keys and swearing at the disturbers of his rest delays for some moments more the imminent discovery. By such delicate workmanship of detail the poet contrives to produce an impression of weirdness, of something uncanny, which signalizes the play as a whole, and it is just in this that the so-called aesthetic unity consists. One might well trace the sources of this impression through the banqueting and sleep-walking scenes, but it is more worth while to point out how the general effect is intensified by comparison with the one scene in England, with its idyllic picture of the good King Edward the Confessor curing his subjects of their diseases. Shakespeare uses freely what Mr. Ruskin regards as the device of a second-rate poet, the "pathetic fallacy"—that is, he attributes to the inanimate things of nature a sympathy with the moods and passions of men. It is hard to understand Mr. Ruskin's objection; the 'pathetic fallacy' is but a weaker modern form of the view of nature on which most of Greek religion was based, and it is surely both a proper and a universal conception for poetry. Coleridge has given the rationale of it in these lines:—

Only that film, which fluttered on the grate,
Still flutters there, the sole unquiet thing.
Methinks, its motion in this hush of nature
Gives it dim sympathies with me who live,
Making it a companionable form,
Whose puny flaps and freaks the idling Spirit
By its own moods interprets, everywhere
Echo or mirror seeking of itself,
And makes a toy of Thought.¹

Fourthly, and finally, there is in Macbeth a special and peculiar unity of structure. The play moves forward with an absolute regularity; it is almost architectural in its rise and fall, in the balance of its parts. The plot is a complex one; it has an ebb and flow, a complication and a resolution, to use technical terms. That is to say, the fortunes of Macbeth swoop up to a crisis or turning-point; and thence down again to a catastrophe. The catastrophe of course closes the play; the crisis, as so often with Shakespeare, comes in its exact centre, in the middle of the middle act, with the escape of Fleance. Hitherto, Macbeth's path has been gilded with success; now the epoch of failure begins. And the parallelisms and correspondences throughout are remarkable. Each act has a definite subject: the Temptation; the First, Second, and Third Crimes; the Retribution. Three accidents, if we may so call them, help Macbeth in the first half of the play: the visit of Duncan to Inverness, his own impulsive murder of the grooms, the flight of Malcolm and Donalbain. And in the second half, three accidents help to bring about his ruin: the escape of Fleance, the false prophecy of the witches, the escape of Macduff. Malcolm and Macduff at the end answer to Duncan and Banquo at the beginning. A meeting with the witches heralds both rise and fall. Finally, each of the Crimes is represented in the Retribution. Malcolm, the son of Duncan, and Macduff, whose wife and child he slew, conquer Macbeth; Fleance begets a race that shall reign in his stead.

A few words are necessary on the style, the technique of the play. As has been said, we have probably only a mutilated stage version before us; and this must account for the ruggedness, the broken lines here and there. The manner of writing is the manner of almost all Shakespeare's great tragedies. The perfect proportion between the thing said and the words it is said in, which is so noticeable in the middle comedies, has disappeared; the thought has become too full, too intense for the expression. Hence these closely-packed pregnant lines, into which the poet seems often to have put more than language will endure, whose exact meaning is often so elusive, so incapable of analysis. Yet this enigmatic speech, with its undersenses and its ironies, is after all appropriate to the half-lights, the elemental problems of the theme which it sets forth. To come to technicalities, the rhythm and metre of Macbeth is that of Shakespeare's later work, though not the latest.¹ The number of feminine endings, the proportion of overflow to end-stopped lines sufficiently show this. There is a small number of light endings. Prose is used to produce special effects in the sleep-walking scene, and in two other scenes. There is a larger proportion of rhyme than we might expect in a play of so late a date, but this fact may be easily explained. The witches, as supernatural beings, speak appropriately in a rhyming metre. The other rhyming lines are mostly couplets coming at the ends of scenes or speeches. There is good reason to believe that, in a stage version, these may be due to the natural desire of the actor for an effective 'curtain'

First Witch. When shall we three meet again
In thunder, lightning, or in rain?

Sec. Witch. When the hurlyburly's done,
When the battle's lost and won.

Third Witch. That will be ere the set of sun.

First Witch. Where the place?

Sec. Witch. Upon the heath.

Third Witch. There to meet with Macbeth.

First Witch. I come, Graymalkin!

Sec. Witch. Paddock calls.

Third Witch. Anon.

All. Fair is foul, and foul is fair:
Hover through the fog and filthy air. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A camp near Forres.

Alarum within. Enter DUNCAN, MALCOLM, DONALBAIN, LENNOX, with Attendants, meeting a bleeding Captain.

Dun. What bloody man is that? He can report,
As seemeth by his plight, of the revolt
The newest state.

Mal. This is the sergeant
Who like a good and hardy soldier fought

'Gainst my captivity. Hail, brave friend!
Say to the king the knowledge of the broil
As thou didst leave it.

Cap. Doubtful it stood;
As two spent swimmers, that do cling together
And choke their art. The merciless Macdonwald—
Worthy to be a rebel, for to that 10
The multiplying villanies of nature
Do swarm upon him—from the western isles
Of kerns and gallowglasses is supplied; ✓
And fortune, on his damned quarrel smiling,
Show'd like a rebel's whore: but all 's too weak.
For brave Macbeth—well he deserves that name—
Disdaining fortune, with his brandish'd steel,
Which smoked with bloody execution,
Like valour's minion carved out his passage
Till he faced the slave; 20
Which ne'er shook hands, nor bade farewell to him,
Till he unseam'd him from the nave to the chaps,
And fix'd his head upon our battlements.

Dun. O valiant cousin! worthy gentleman!

Cap. As whence the sun 'gins his reflection
Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders break,
So from that spring whence comfort seem'd to come Discomfort swells. Mark, king of Scotland, mark:
No sooner justice had with valour arm'd
Compell'd these skipping kerns to trust their heels, 30
But the Norwegian lord surveying vantage,
With furbish'd arms and new supplies of men
Began a fresh assault.

Dun. Dismay'd not this
Our captains, Macbeth and Banquo?

Cap. Yes;
As sparrows eagles, or the hare the lion.
If I say sooth, I must report they were

As cannons overcharged with double cracks, so they Doubly redoubled strokes upon the foe:

Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
Or memorize another Golgotha, = place of skull. 40
I cannot tell.

But I am faint, my gashes cry for help.

Dun. So well thy words become thee as thy wounds;
They smack of honour both. Go get him surgeons.

[Exit Captain, attended.]

Who comes here?

Enter Ross (and Angus.)

Mal. The worthythane of Ross.

Len. What a haste looks through his eyes! So should he look

That seems to speak things strange.

Ross. God save the king!

Dun. Whence camest thou, worthythane?

Ross. From Fife, great king;

Where the Norweyan banners flout the sky
And fan our people cold. Norway himself, 50
With terrible numbers,

Assisted by that most disloyal traitor
The thane of Cawdor, began a dismal conflict;
Till that Bellona's bridegroom, lapp'd in proof,
Confronted him with self-comparisons,
Point against point rebellious, arm 'gainst arm,
Curbing his lavish spirit: and, to conclude,
The victory fell on us.

Dun. Great happiness!

Ross. That now

Sveno, the Norways' king, craves composition;
Nor would we deign him burial of his men 60
Till he disbursed at Saint Colme's inch
Ten thousand dollars to our general use.

Dun. No more that thane of Cawdor shall deceive
Our bosom interest: go pronounce his present death,
And with his former title greet Macbeth.

Ross. I'll see it done.

Dun. What he hath lost noble Macbeth hath won.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A heath near Forres.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

First Witch. Where hast thou been, sister?

Sec. Witch. Killing swine.

Third Witch. Sister, where thou?

First Witch. A sailor's wife had chestnuts in her lap,
And munch'd, and munch'd, and munch'd:—'Give me,' quoth I:

'Aroint thee, witch!' the rump-fed ronyon cries.
Her husband's to Aleppo gone, master o' the Tiger:
But in a sieve I'll thither sail,
And, like a rat without a tail,
I'll do, I'll do, and I'll do.

Sec. Witch. I'll give thee a wind.

First Witch. Thou'rt kind.

Third Witch. And I another.

First Witch. I myself have all the other,
And the very ports they blow,
All the quarters that they know
I' the shipman's card.
I will drain him dry as hay:
Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his pent-house lid;
He shall live a man forbid:
Weary se'nnights nine times nine
Shall he dwindle, peak and pine:
Though his bark cannot be lost,

Yet it shall be tempest-tost.

Look what I have.

Sec. Witch. Show me, show me.

First Witch. Here I have a pilot's thumb, Wreck'd as homeward he did come. [Drum within.]

Third Witch. A drum, a drum! 30
Macbeth doth come.

All. The weird sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about:
Thrice to thine and thrice to mine
And thrice again, to make up nine.
Peace! the charm 's wound up.

Enter MACBETH and BANQUO.

Macb. So foul and fair a day I have not seen.

Ban. How far is 't call'd to Forres? What are these 40
So wither'd and so wild in their attire,
That look not like the inhabitants o' the earth,
And yet are on 't? Live you? or are you aught
That man may question? You seem to understand me,
By each at once her choppy finger laying
Upon her skinny lips: you should be women,
And yet your beards forbid me to interpret
That you are so.

Macb. Speak, if you can: what are you?

First Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Glamis!

Sec. Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Cawdor!

Third Witch. All hail, Macbeth, that shalt be king hereafter! 50

Ban. Good sir, why do you start; and seem to fear

Things that do sound so fair? I' the name of truth,
Are ye fantastical, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye show? My noble partner
You greet with present grace and great prediction
Of noble having and of royal hope,
That he seems rapt withal: to me you speak not.
If you can look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow and which will not,
Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear
Your favours nor your hate. 60

First Witch. Hail!

Sec. Witch. Hail!

Third Witch. Hail!

First Witch. Lesser than Macbeth, and greater.

Sec. Witch. Not so happy, yet much happier.

Third Witch. Thou shalt get kings, though thou be none:
So all hail, Macbeth and Banquo!

First Witch. Banquo and Macbeth, all hail!

Macb. Stay, you imperfect speakers, tell me more: 70
By Sinel's death I know I amthane of Glamis;
But how of Cawdor? thethane of Cawdor lives,
A prosperous gentleman; and to be king
Stands not within the prospect of belief,
No more than to be Cawdor. Say from whence
You owe this strange intelligence? or why
Upon this blasted heath you stop our way
With such prophetic greeting? Speak, I charge you.

[Witches vanish.]

Ban. The earth hath bubbles, as the water has,
And these are of them. Whither are they vanish'd? 80

Macb. Into the air; and what seem'd corporal melted
As breath into the wind. Would they had stay'd!

Ban. Were such things here as we do speak about?

Or have we eaten on the insane root
That takes the reason prisoner?

Macb. Your children shall be kings. (Comp.)

Ban. You shall be king.

Macb. And thane of Cawdor too: went it not so?

Ban. To the selfsame tune and words. Who's here?

Enter ROSS and ANGUS.

Ross. The king hath happily received, Macbeth,
The news of thy success; and when he reads
Thy personal venture in the rebels' fight,
His wonders and his praises do contend
Which should be thine or his: silenced with that,
In viewing o'er the rest o' the selfsame day,
He finds thee in the stout Norwegian ranks,
Nothing afeard of what thyself didst make,
Strange images of death. As thick as hail
Came post with post; and every one did bear
Thy praises in his kingdom's great defence,
And pour'd them down before him.

Ang. We are sent
To give thee from our royal master thanks;
Only to herald thee into his sight,
Not pay thee.

Ross. And, for an earnest of a greater honour,
He bade me, from him, call thee thane of Cawdor:
In which addition, hail, most worthy thane!
For it is thine.

Ban. What, can the devil speak true?

Macb. The thane of Cawdor lives: why do you dress me
In borrow'd robes?

Ang. Who was the thane lives yet;
But under heavy judgment bears that life
Which he deserves to lose. Whether he was combined
With those of Norway, or did line the rebel 110

With hidden help and vantage, or that with both
 He labour'd in his country's wreck, I know not;
 But treasons capital, confess'd and proved,
 Have overthrown him.

Macb. [Aside] Glamis, and thane of Cawdor!
 The greatest is behind. [To Ross and Angus] Thanks for your pains.

[To Ban.] Do you not hope your children shall be kings,
 When those that gave the thane of Cawdor to me
 Promised no less to them?

Ban. That trusted home 120
 Might yet enkindle you unto the crown,
 Besides the thane of Cawdor. ✓ But 't is strange:
 And oftentimes, to win us to our harm,
 The instruments of darkness tell us truths,
 Win us with honest trifles, to betray 's
 In deepest consequence.
 Cousins, a word, I pray you.

Macb. [Aside] Two truths are told,
 As happy prologues to the swelling act
 Of the imperial theme.—I thank you, gentlemen.

[Aside] This supernatural soliciting 130
 Cannot be ill, cannot be good: if ill,
 Why hath it given me earnest of success,
 Commencing in a truth? I am thane of Cawdor:
 If good, why do I yield to that suggestion
 Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair
 And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
 Against the use of nature? Present fears
 Are less than horrible imaginings:
 My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
 Shakes so my single state of man that function 140
 Is smother'd in surmise, and nothing is
 But what is not

Ban. Look, how our partner's rapt.

Macb. [Aside] If chance will have me king, why, chance may crown me,
Without my stir.

Ban. New honours come upon him,
Like our strange garments, cleave not to their mould
But with the aid of use.

Macb. [Aside] Come what come may,
Time and the hour runs through the roughest day.

Ban. Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.

Macb. Give me your favour: my dull brain was wrought
With things forgotten. Kind gentlemen, your pains 150
Are register'd where every day I turn
The leaf to read them. Let us toward the king.
Think upon what hath chanced, and, at more time,
The interim having weigh'd it, let us speak
Our free hearts each to other.

Ban. Very gladly.

Macb. Till then, enough. Come, friends. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Forres. The palace.

Flourish. Enter DUNCAN, MALCOLM, DONALBAIN,
LENNOX, and Attendants.

Dun. Is execution done on Cawdor? Are not
Those in commission yet return'd?

Mal. My liege,
They are not yet come back. But I have spoke
With one that saw him die: who did report
That very frankly he confess'd his treasons,
Implored your highness' pardon and set forth
A deep repentance: nothing in his life
Became him like the leaving it; he died
As one that had been studied in his death

To throw away the dearest thing he owed,
As 't were a careless trifle.

✓ Dun. There 's no art
To find the mind's construction in the face:
He was a gentleman on whom I built
An absolute trust.

Enter MACBETH, BANQUO, ROSS, and ANGUS.

O worthiest cousin!

The sin of my ingratitude even now
Was heavy on me: thou art so far before
That swiftest wing of recompense is slow
To overtake thee. Would thou hadst less deserved,
That the proportion both of thanks and payment
Might have been mine! only I have left to say,
More is thy due than more than all can pay.

20

Macb. The service and the loyalty I owe,
In doing it, pays itself. Your highness' part
Is to receive our duties; and our duties
Are to your throne and state children and servants,
Which do but what they should, by doing every thing
Safe toward your love and honour. ✓

Dun.

Welcome hither:

I have begun to plant thee, and will labour
To make thee full of growing. Noble Banquo,
That hast no less deserved, nor must be known
No less to have done so, let me infold thee
And hold thee to my heart.

Ban.

There if I grow,
The harvest is your own.

Dun.

My plenteous joys,
Wanton in fulness, seek to hide themselves
In drops of sorrow. Sons, kinsmen, thanes,
And you whose places are the nearest, know
We will establish our estate upon

Our eldest, Malcolm, whom we name hereafter
The Prince of Cumberland; which honour must Not unaccompanied invest him only,
But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine
On all deservers. From hence to Inverness,
And bind us further to you.

40

Macb. The rest is labour, which is not used for you:
I'll be myself the harbinger and make joyful
The hearing of my wife with your approach;
So humbly take my leave.

Dun.

My worthy Cawdor!

Macb. [Aside] The Prince of Cumberland! that is a step
On which I must fall down, or else o'erleap,
For in my way it lies. Stars, hide your fires;
Let not light see my black and deep desires:
The eye wink at the hand; yet let that be,
Which the eye fears, when it is done, to see.

[Exit.

Dun. True, worthy Banquo; he is full so valiant,
And in his commendations I am fed;
It is a banquet to me. Let's after him,
Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerless kinsman.

[*Flourish. Exeunt.*SCENE V. Inverness. Macbeth's castle.Enter LADY MACBETH, reading a letter.

Lady M. 'They met me in the day of success: and I have learned by the perfectest report, they have more in them than mortal knowledge. When I burned in desire to question them further, they made themselves air, into which they vanished. Whiles I stood rapt in the wonder of it, came missives from the king, who all-hailed me "Thane of Caw-dor"; by which title, before, these weird sisters saluted me, and referred me to the coming on of time, with "Hail, king that shalt be!" This have I thought good to deliver thee, my dearest partner of greatness, that thou mightst not lose the dues of rejoicing, by being ignorant of what greatness is promised thee. Lay it to thy heart, and farewell.

Glamis thou art, and Cawdor; and shalt be
What thou art promised: yet do I fear thy nature;
It is too full o' the milk of human kindness
To catch the nearest way: thou wouldst be great;
'Art not without ambition, but without 20
The illness should attend it: what thou wouldst highly,
That wouldst thou holily; wouldst not play false,
And yet wouldst wrongly win: thou 'ldst have, great Glamis,
That which cries 'Thus thou must do, if thou have it;
And that which rather thou dost fear to do
Than wishest should be undone.' Hie thee hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear;
And chastise with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate and metaphysical aid doth seem 30
To have thee crown'd withal. ✓

Enter a Messenger.

What is your tidings?

Mess. The king comes here to-night.

Lady M.

Thou'rt mad to say it:

Is not thy master with him? who, were 't so,
Would have inform'd for preparation.

Mess. So please you, it is true: our thane is coming:
One of my fellows had the speed of him,
Who, almost dead for breath, had scarcely more
Than would make up his message.

Lady M.

Give him tending;

He brings great news.

[Exit Messenger.

The raven himself is hoarse
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan 40
Under my battlements. Come, you spirits

That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here,
And fill me from the crown to the toe top-full
Of direst cruelty! make thick my blood;
Stop up the access and passage to remorse,
That no compunctious visitings of nature
Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between
The effect and it! Come to my woman's breasts,
And take my milk for gall, you murdering ministers,
Wherever in your sightless substances
You wait on nature's mischief! Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes,
Nor heaven peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry, 'Hold, Hold!'

50

Enter MACBETH.

Great Glamis! worthy Cawdor!
Greater than both, by the all-hail hereafter!
Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present, and I feel now
The future in the instant.

Macb. My dearest love,
Duncan comes here to-night.

Lady M. And when goes hence? 60

Macb. To-morrow, as he purposes.

Lady M. O, never Shall sun that morrow see!
Your face, my thane, is as a book where men
May read strange matters. To beguile the time,
Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye,
Your hand, your tongue: look like the innocent flower,
But be the serpent under 't. He that's coming Must be provided for: and you shall put
This night's great business into my dispatch;

Which shall to all our nights and days to come
Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.

Macb. We will speak further.

Lady M.

Only look up clear;

To alter favour ever is to fear:

Leave all the rest to me.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI. Before Macbeth's castle.

Hautboys and torches. Enter DUNCAN, MALCOLM, DONALBAIN, BANQUO, LENNOX, MACDUFF, ROSS, ANGUS, and Attendants.

Dun. This castle hath a pleasant seat; the air
Nimbly and sweetly recommends itself
Unto our gentle senses.

Ban.

This guest of summer,
The temple-haunting martlet, does approve,
By his loved mansionry, that the heaven's breath
Smells wooingly here: no jutty, frieze,
Buttress, nor coign of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendent bed and procreant cradle:
Where they most breed and haunt, I have observed,
The air is delicate.

Enter LADY MACBETH.

Dun.

See, see, our honour'd hostess!
The love that follows us sometime is our trouble,
Which still we thank as love. Herein I teach you
How you shall bid God 'ild us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble.

Lady M.

All our service
In every point twice done and then done double
Were poor and single business to contend
Against those honours deep and broad wherewith
Your majesty loads our house, for those of old,

And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermits.

Dun. Where 's the thane of Cawdor? 20
We coursed him at the heels, and had a purpose
To be his purveyor: but he rides well;
And his great love, sharp as his spur, hath holp him
To his home before us. Fair and noble hostess,
We are your guest to-night.

Lady M. Your servants ever
Have theirs, themselves and what is theirs, in compt,
To make their audit at your highness' pleasure,
Still to return your own.

Dun. Give me your hand;
Conduct me to mine host: we love him highly,
And shall continue our graces towards him. 30
By your leave, hostess. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. Macbeth's castle.

*Hautboys and torches. Enter a Sewer, and divers Servants with dishes and service, and pass over the stage. Then
enter MACBETH.*

Macb. If it were done when 't is done, then 't were well
It were done quickly: if the assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch
With his surcease success; that but this blow
Might be the be-all and the end-all here,
But here, upon this bank and shoal of time,
We 'ld jump the life to come. But in these cases
We still have judgment here; that we but teach
Bloody instructions, which, being taught, return
To plague the inventor: this even-handed justice 10
Commends the ingredients of our poison'd chalice
To our own lips. He 's here in double trust;
First, as I am his kinsman and his subject,

Strong both against the deed; then, as his host,
Who should against his murderer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Besides, this Duncan Hath borne his faculties so meek, hath been
So clear in his great office, that his virtues
Will plead like angels, trumpet-tongued, against
The deep damnation of his taking-off; 20
And pity, like a naked new-born babe,
Striding the blast, or heaven's cherubim, horsed
Upon the sightless couriers of the air,
Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind. ✓ I have no spur
To prick the sides of my intent, but only Vaulting ambition, which o'erleaps itself
And falls on the other.

Enter LADY MACBETH.

How now! what news?

Lady M. He has almost supp'd: why have you left the chamber?

Macb. Hath he ask'd for me?

Lady M. Know you not he has? 30

Macb. We will proceed no further in this business:
He hath honour'd me of late; and I have bought
Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Not cast aside so soon.

Lady M. Was the hope drunk
Wherein you dress'd yourself? hath it slept since?
And wakes it now, to look so green and pale
At what it did so freely? From this time
Such I account thy love. Art thou afraid
To be the same in thine own act and valour 40
As thou art in desire? Wouldst thou have that
Which thou esteem'st the ornament of life,

And live a coward in thine own esteem,
Letting 'I dare not' wait upon 'I would',
Like the poor cat i' the adage?

Macb.

Prithce, peace:

I dare do all that may become a man;
Who dares do more is none.

Lady M.

What beast was 't, then,

That made you break this enterprise to me?
When you durst do it, then you were a man;
And, to be more than what you were, you would Be so much more the man. Nor time nor place
Did then adhere, and yet you would make both:
They have made themselves, and that their fitness now
Does unmake you. I have given suck, and know
How tender 't is to love the babe that milks me:
I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluck'd my nipple from his boneless gums,
And dash'd the brains out, had I so sworn as you
Have done to this.

Macb.

If we should fail?

Lady M.

We fail!

But screw your courage to the sticking-place,
And we'll not fail. When Duncan is asleep—
Whereto the rather shall his day's hard journey
Soundly invite him—his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassail so convince
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume, and the receipt of reason
A limbeck only: when in swinish sleep
Their drenched natures lie as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon
The unguarded Duncan? what ~~not~~ put upon
His spongy officers, who shall bear the guilt
Of our great quell?

Macb.

Bring forth men-children only:

For thy undaunted mettle should compose
Nothing but males. Will it not be received,
When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two
Of his own chamber and used their very daggers,
That they have done 't?

Lady M. Who dares receive it other,
As we shall make our griefs and clamour roar
Upon his death?

Macb. I am settled, and bend up
Each corporal agent to this terrible feat. 80
Away, and mock the time with fairest show:
False face must hide what the false heart doth know.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. Court of Macbeth's castle.

Enter BANQUO, and FLEANCE bearing a torch before him.

Ban. How goes the night, boy?

Fle. The moon is down; I have not heard the clock.

Ban. And she goes down at twelve.

Fle. I take 't, 't is later, sir,

Ban. Hold, take my sword. There 's husbandry in heaven;
Their candles are all out. Take thee that too.
A heavy summons lies like lead upon me,
And yet I would not sleep: merciful powers,
Restrain in me the cursed thoughts that nature
Gives way to in repose!

Enter MACBETH, and a Servant with a torch.

Give me my sword.

Who 's there?

Macb. A friend.

Ban. What, sir, not yet at rest? The king's a-bed:
He hath been in unusual pleasure, and
Sent forth great largess to your offices.
This diamond he greets your wife withal,
By the name of most kind hostess; and shut up
In measureless content.

Macb. Being unprepared,
Our will became the servant to defect;
Which else should free have wrought.

Ban. All's well.
I dreamt last night of the three weird sisters: 20
To you they have show'd some truth.

Macb. I think not of them:
Yet, when we can entreat an hour to serve,
We would spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time.

Ban. At your kind'st leisure.

Macb. If you shall cleave to my consent, when 't is,
It shall make honour for you.

Ban. So I lose none
In seeking to augment it, but still keep
My bosom franchised and allegiance clear,
I shall be counsell'd.

Macb. Good repose the while!

Ban. Thanks, sir: the like to you! 30

[Exeunt Banquo and Fleance.]

Macb. Go bid thy mistress, when my drink is ready,
She strike upon the bell. Get thee to bed. [Exit Servant.]
Is this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee.
I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.
Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling as to sight? or art thou but
A dagger of the mind, a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?

I see thee yet, in form as palpable
As this which now I draw. 40
Thou marshall'st me the way that I was going;
And such an instrument I was to use.
Mine eyes are made the fools o' the other senses,
Or else worth all the rest; I see thee still,
And on thy blade and dudgeon gouts of blood,
Which was not so before. There's no such thing:
It is the bloody business which informs
Thus to mine eyes. Now o'er the one half-world
Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse 50
The curtained sleep; witchcraft celebrates
Pale Hecate's offerings, and wither'd murder,
Alarum'd by his sentinel, the wolf,
Whose howl's his watch, thus with his stealthy pace,
With Tarquin's ravishing strides, towards his design
Moves like a ghost. Thou sure and firm-set earth,
Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for fear
Thy very stones prate of my whereabouts,
And take the present horror from the time,
Which now suits with it. Whiles I threat, he lives: 60
Words to the heat of deeds too cold breath gives.

[A bell rings.]

I go, and it is done; the bell invites me.
Hear it not, Duncan; for it is a knell
That summons thee to heaven or to hell. [Exit.]

SCENE II. The same.

Enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. \That which hath made them drunk hath made me bold;\

What hath quench'd them hath given me fire. Hark! Peace!
It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal bellman,
Which gives the stern'st good-night. He is about it:

The doors are open; and the surfeited grooms
Do mock their charge with snores: I have drugg'd their possets,
That death and nature do contend about them,
Whether they live or die.

Enter MACBETH above, for a moment.

Macb. Who 's there? what, ho!

Lady M. Alack, I am afraid they have awaked, 10
And 't is not done. The attempt and not the deed Confounds us. Hark! I laid their daggers ready;
He could not miss 'em. (Had he not resembled
My father as he slept, I had done 't.)

Enter MACBETH.

My husband!

Macb. I have done the deed. Didst thou not hear a noise?

Lady M. I heard the owl scream and the crickets cry.

Macb. Did not you speak?

Lady M. When? Now?

Macb. As I descended.

Lady M. I!

Macb. Hark!

Who lies i' the second chamber?

Lady M. Donalbain. 20

Macb. This is a sorry sight. [Looking on his hands.]

Lady M. A foolish thought, to say a sorry sight.

Macb. There 's one did laugh in 's sleep, and one cried 'Murder!'

That they did wake each other: I stood and heard them:
But they did say their prayers, and address'd them
Again to sleep.

Lady M. There are two lodged together.

Macb. One cried 'God bless us!' and 'Amen' the other;
As they had seen me with these hangman's hands.

Listening their fear, I could not say 'Amen',
When they did say 'God bless us!'

Lady M. Consider it not so deeply.

Macb. But wherefore could not I pronounce 'Amen'? 31
I had most need of blessing, and 'Amen'
Stuck in my throat.

Lady M. These deeds must not be thought
'After these ways; so, it will make us mad.)

Macb. Methought I heard a voice cry 'Sleep no more!
Macbeth does murder sleep', the innocent sleep,
Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care,
The death of each day's life, sore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in life's feast,—

Lady M. What do you mean? 40

Macb. Still it cried 'Sleep no more!' to all the house:
'Glamis hath murder'd sleep, and therefore Cawdor
Shall sleep no more; Macbeth shall sleep no more'.

Lady M. Who was it that thus cried? Why, worthy thane,
You do unbend your noble strength, to think
So brainsickly of things. Go, get some water,
And wash this filthy witness from your hand.
Why did you bring these daggers from the place?
They must lie there: go carry them; and smear
The sleepy grooms with blood.

Macb. I'll go no more: 50
I am afraid to think what I have done;
Look on't again I dare not.

Lady M. Infirm of purpose!
Give me the daggers: the sleeping and the dead
Are but as pictures: 't is the eye of childhood
That fears a painted devil. If he do bleed,
I'll gild the faces of the grooms withal;
For it must seem their guilt. [Exit. Knocking within.]

Macb. Whence is that knocking?

How is 't with me, when every noise appals me?
 • What hands are here? ha! they pluck out mine eyes.
 Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather
 The multitudinous seas incarnadine,
 Making the green one red.

Re-enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. My hands are of your colour; but I shame
 To wear a heart so white. [Knocking within.] I hear a knocking

At the south entry: retire we to our chamber:
 A little water clears us of this deed:

How easy is it, then! Your constancy Hath left you unattended. [Knocking within.] Hark! more knocking.

Get on your nightgown, lest occasion call us,
 And show us to be watchers. Be not lost
 So poorly in your thoughts.

Macb. To know my deed, 't were best not know myself.
 [Knocking within.]

Wake Duncan with thy knocking! I would thou couldst!
 [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same.

Knocking within. Enter a Porter.

Porter. Here 's a knocking indeed! If a man were porter of hell-gate, he should have old turning the key. [Knocking within.] Knock, knock, knock! Who 's there, i' the name of Beelzebub? Here 's a farmer, that hanged himself on the expectation of plenty: come in time; have napkins enow about you; here you 'll sweat for 't. [Knocking within.] Knock, knock! Who 's there, in the other devil's name?
 Faith, here 's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either scale; who committed treason enough for God's sake, yet could not equivocate to heaven: O, come in, equivocator. [Knocking within.] Knock, knock, knock! Who's there? Faith, here's an English tailor come hither, for stealing out of a French hose: come in, tailor; here you may roast your goose. [Knocking within.] Knock, knock; never at quiet! What are you? But this place is too cold for hell. I'll devil-porter it no further: I had thought to have let in some of all professions that go the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire. [Knocking within.] Anon, anon! I pray you, remember the porter. [Opens the gate.]

Enter MACDUFF and LENNOX.

Macd. Was it so late, friend, ere you went to bed,
That you do lie so late?

Port. 'Faith, sir, we were carousing till the second cock. 38

Macd. Is thy master stirring?

Enter MACBETH.

Our knocking has awaked him; here he comes.

Len. Good morrow, noble sir.

Macb. Good morrow, both.

Macd. Is the king stirring, worthy thane?

Macb. Not yet. 50

Macd. He did command me to call timely on him:
I have almost slipp'd the hour.

Macb. I'll bring you to him.

Macd. I know this is a joyful trouble to you;
But yet 't is one.

Macb. The labour we delight in physics pain.
This is the door.

Macd. I'll make so bold to call,
For 't is my limited service.

[Exit.]

Len. Goes the king hence to-day?

Macb. He does: he did appoint so.

Len. The night has been unruly: where we lay,
Our chimneys were blown down; and, as they say, 60
Lamentings heard i' the air; strange screams of death,
And prophesying with accents terrible
Of dire combustion and confused events
New hatch'd to the woeful time: the obscure bird
Clamour'd the livelong night: some say, the earth
Was feverous and did shake.

Macb. "T was a rough night.

Len. My young remembrance cannot parallel
A fellow to it.

Re-enter MACDUFF.

Macd. O horror, horror, horror! Tongue nor heart Cannot conceive nor name thee!

Macb. }

Len. }

What's the matter? 70

Macd. Confusion now hath made his masterpiece!
Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope
The Lord's anointed temple, and stole thence
The life o' the building!

Macb. What is 't you say? the life?

Len. Mean you his majesty?

Macd. Approach the chamber, and destroy your sight
With a new Gorgon: do not bid me speak;
See, and then speak yourselves.

[Exeunt Macbeth and Lennox.

Awake, awake!

Ring the alarum-bell. Murder and treason!
Banquo and Donalbain! Malcolm! awake! 80
Shake off this downy sleep, death's counterfeit,
And look on death itself! up, up, and see
The great doom's image! Malcolm! Banquo!
As from your graves rise up, and walk like sprites,
To countenance this horror! Ring the bell. [Bell rings.

Enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. What's the business,
That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the house? speak, speak!

Macd. O gentle lady,
'T is not for you to hear what I can speak:
The repetition, in a woman's ear,
Would murder as it fell. 90

Enter BANQUO.

O Banquo, Banquo,
Our royal master's murder'd!

Lady M. Woe, alas!
What, in our house?

Ban. Too cruel any where.
Dear Duff, I prithee, contradict thyself,
And say it is not so.

Re-enter MACBETH and LENNOX, with ROSS.

Macb. Had I but died an hour before this chance,
I had lived a blessed time; for, from this instant,
There's nothing serious in mortality:
All is but toys: renown and grace is dead;
The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees 100
Is left this vault to brag of.

Enter MALCOLM and DONALBAIN.

Don. What is amiss?

Macb. You are, and do not know 't:
The spring, the head, the fountain of your blood
Is stopp'd; the very source of it is stopp'd.

Macd. Your royal father's murder'd.

Mal. O, by whom?

Len. Those of his chamber, as it seem'd, had done 't:
Their hands and faces were all badged with blood:

So were their daggers, which unwiped we found
Upon their pillows:

They stared, and were distracted; no man's life
Was to be trusted with them.

Macb. O, yet I do repent me of my fury,
That I did kill them.

Macd. Wherefore did you so?

Macb. Who can be wise, amazed, temperate and furious;
Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man:

The expedition of my violent love

Outrun the pauser, reason. Here lay Duncan.

His silver skin laced with his golden blood;

And his gash'd stabs look'd like a breach in nature

For ruin's wasteful entrance: there, the murderers, 120

Steep'd in the colours of their trade, their daggers

Unmannerly breech'd with gore: who could refrain,

That had a heart to love, and in that heart

Courage to make 's love known?

Lady M. Help me hence, ho!

Macd. Look to the lady.

Mal. [Aside to Don.] Why do we hold our tongues,
That most may claim this argument for ours?

Don. [Aside to Mal.] What should be spoken here, where our fate,

Hid in an auger-hole, may rush, and seize us?

Let's away;

Our tears are not yet brew'd.

Mal. [Aside to Don.] Nor our strong sorrow 130
Upon the foot of motion.

Ban. Look to the lady:

[Lady Macbeth is carried out.]

And when we have our naked frailties hid,

That suffer in exposure, let us meet,

And question this most bloody piece of work,

To know it further. Fears and scruples shake us:

In the great hand of God I stand; and thence Against the undivulged pretence I fight
Of treasonous malice.

Macd. And so do I.

All. So all.

Macb. Let's briefly put on manly readiness,
And meet it the hall together.

All. Well contented. 140

[Exeunt all but Malcolm and Donalbain.]

Mal. What will you do? Let's not consort with them:
To show an unfelt sorrow is an office
Which the false man does easy. I'll to England.

Don. To Ireland, I; our separate fortune
Shall keep us both the safer: where we are,
There's daggers in men's smiles: the near in blood,
The nearer bloody.

Mal. This murderous shaft that's shot
Hath not yet lighted, and our safest way
Is to avoid the aim. Therefore, to horse;
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking, 150
But shift away: there's warrant in that theft
Which steals itself, when there's no mercy left. [Exeunt]

SCENE IV. Outside Macbeth's castle.

704 Enter Ross and an old Man.

Old M. Threescore and ten I can remember well:
Within the volume of which time I have seen
Hours dreadful and things strange; but this sore night
Hath trifled former knowings.

Ross. Ah, good father,
Thou seest, the heavens, as troubled with man's act,
Threaten his bloody stage: by the clock, 't is day,
And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp:
Is't night's predominance, or the day's shame,

That darkness does the face of earth entomb,
When living light should kiss it? ✓

Old M.

'T is unnatural,

10

Even like the deed that 's done. On Tuesday last,
A falcon, towering in her pride of place,
Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at and kill'd.

Ross. And Duncan's horses—a thing most strange and certain—

Beauteous and swift, the minions of their race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would make War with mankind.

Old M.

'T is said they eat each other.

Ross. They did so, to the amazement of mine eyes
That look'd upon 't. Here comes the good Macduff. 20

Enter MACDUFF.

How goes the world, sir, now?

Macd.

Why, see you not?

Ross. Is 't known who did this more than bloody deed?

Macd. Those that Macbeth hath slain.

Ross.

Alas, the day!

What good could they pretend?

Macd.

They were suborn'd:

Malcolm and Donalbain, the king's two sons,
Are stol'n away and fled; which puts upon them
Suspicion of the deed.

Ross.

'Gainst nature still!

Thrifless ambition, that wilt ravin up
Thine own life's means! Then 't is most like
The sovereignty will fall upon Macbeth.

30

Macd. He is already named, and gone to Scone
To be invested.

Ross.

Where is Duncan's body?

Macd. Carried to Colmekill,

The sacred storehouse of his predecessors,
And guardian of their bones.

Ross. Will you to Scone?

Macd. No, cousin, I'll to Fife.

Ross. Well, I will thither.

Macd. Well, may you see things well done there: adieu!
Lest our old robes sit easier than our new!

Ross. Farewell, father.

Old M. God's benison go with you; and with those 40
That would make good of bad, and friends of foes! [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. Forres. The palace.

Enter BANQUO.

Ban. Thou hast it now: king, Cawdor, Glamis, all,
As the weird women promised, and, I fear,
Thou play'dst most foully for 't: yet it was said
It should not stand in thy posterity,
But that myself should be the root and father
Of many kings. If there come truth from them—
As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches shine—
Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well,
And set me up in hope? But hush! no more. 10

Sennet sounded. Enter MACBETH, as king, LADY MACBETH, as queen, LENNOX, ROSS, Lords, Ladies, and Attendants.

Macb. Here's our chief guest.

Lady M. If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all-thing unbecoming.

Macb. To-night we hold a solemn supper, sir,
And I 'll request your presence.

Ban. Let your highness
Command upon me; to the which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tie
For ever knit.

Macb. Ride you this afternoon?

Ban. Ay, my good lord. 20

Macb. We should have else desired your good advice,
Which still hath been both grave and prosperous,
In this day's council; but we 'll take to-morrow.
Is 't far you ride?

Ban. As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper: go not my horse the better,
I must become a borrower of the night
For a dark hour or twain.

Macb. Fail not our feast.

Ban. My lord, I will not.

Macb. We hear, our bloody cousins are bestow'd 30
In England and in Ireland, not confessing
Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers
With strange invention: but of that to-morrow,
When therewithal we shall have cause of state
Craving us jointly. Hie you to horse: adieu,
Till you return at night. Goes Fleance with you?

Ban. Ay, my good lord: our time does call upon 's.

Macb. I wish your horses swift and sure of foot;
And so I do commend you to their backs.

Farewell. [Exit Banquo. 40

Let every man be master of his time

Till seven at night: to make society

The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself

Till supper-time alone: while then, God be with you! ✓

[Exeunt all but Macbeth, and an attendant.]

Sirrah, a word with you: attend those men
Our pleasure?

Atten. They are, my lord, without the palace gate.

Macb. Bring them before us. [Exit Attendant.

To be thus is nothing:

But to be safely thus.—Our fears in Banquo
Stick deep; and in his royalty of nature 50
Reigns that which would be fear'd: 't is much he dares;
And, to that dauntless temper of his mind,
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour
To act in safety. There is none but he Whose being I do fear: and, under him,
My Genius is rebuked: as, it is said,
Mark Antony's was by Cæsar. He chid the sisters
When first they put the name of king upon me,
And bade them speak to him: then prophet-like
They hail'd him father to a line of kings: 60
Upon my head they placed a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand,
No son of mine succeeding. If 't be so,
For Banquo's issue have I filed my mind;
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd;
Put rancours in the vessel of my peace
Only for them; and mine eternal jewel
Given to the common enemy of man,
To make them kings, the seed of Banquo kings! 70
Rather than so, come fate into the list,
And champion me to the utterance! Who's there?

Re-enter Attendant, with two Murderers.

Now go to the door, and stay there till we call.

[Exit Attendant.

Was it not yesterday we spoke together?

First Mur. It was, so please your highness.

Macb. Well then, now
Have you consider'd of my speeches? Know
That it was he in the times past which held you
So under fortune, which you thought had been
Our innocent self: this I made good to you
In our last conference, pass'd in probation with you, 80
How you were borne in hand, how cross'd, the instruments,
Who wrought with them, and all things else that might
To half a soul and to a notion crazed
Say ' Thus did Banquo '.

First Mur. You made it known to us.

Macb. I did so, and went further, which is now
Our point of second meeting. Do you find
Your patience so predominant in your nature
That you can let this go? Are you so gospell'd
To pray for this good man and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave 90
And beggar'd yours for ever?

First Mur. We are men, my liege.

Macb. Ay, in the catalogue ye go for men;
As hounds and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs,
Shoughs, water-rugs and demi-wolves are clept
All by the name of dogs: the valued file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The housekeeper, the hunter, every one
According to the gift which bounteous nature
Hath in him closed, whereby he does receive Particular addition, from the bill 100
That writes them all alike: and so of men.
Now, if you have a station in the file,
Not in the worst rank of manhood, say it;
And I will put that business in your bosoms,
Whose execution takes your enemy off,
Grapples you to the heart and love of us,

Who wear our health but sickly in his life,
Which in his death were perfect.

Sec. Mur. I am one, my liege,
Whom the vile blows and buffets of the world
Have so incensed that I am reckless what
I do to spite the world. ✓

110

First Mur. And I another
So weary with disasters, tugg'd with fortune,
That I would set my life on any chance,
To mend it, or be rid on 't.

Macb. Both of you
Know Banquo was your enemy.

Both Mur. True, my lord.

Macb. So is he mine; and in such bloody distance,
That every minute of his being thrusts
Against my near'st of life: and though I could
With barefaced power sweep him from my sight
And bid my will avouch it, yet I must not,
For certain friends that are both his and mine,
Whose loves I may not drop, but wail his fall
Who I myself struck down; and thence it is,
That I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons.

120

Sec. Mur. We shall, my lord,
Perform what you command us.

First Mur. Though our lives—

Macb. Your spirits shine through you. Within this hour at most

I will advise you where to plant yourselves;
Acquaint you with the perfect spy o' the time, 130
The moment on 't; for 't must be done to-night,
And something from the palace; always thought
That I require a clearness: and with him—
To leave no rubs nor botches in the work—

Fleance his son, that keeps him company,
Whose absence is no less material to me
Than is his father's, must embrace the fate
Of that dark hour. Resolve yourselves apart:
I'll come to you anon.

Both Mur. We are resolved, my lord.

Macb. I'll call upon you straight: abide within. 140

[Exeunt Murderers.]

It is concluded. Banquo, thy soul's flight,
If it find heaven, must find it out to-night.

[Exit.]

SCENE II. The palace.

Enter LADY MACBETH and a Servant.

Lady M. Is Banquo gone from court?

Serv. Ay, madam, but returns again to-night.

Lady M. Say to the king, I would attend his leisure
For a few words.

Serv. Madam, I will. [Exit.]

Lady M. Nought's had, all's spent,
Where our desire is got without content:
'Tis safer to be that which we destroy
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy.

Enter MACBETH.

How now, my lord! why do you keep alone,
Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died 10
With them they think on? Things without all remedy
Should be without regard: what's done is done.

Macb. We have scotch'd the snake, not kill'd it:
She'll close and be herself, whilst our poor malice
Remains in danger of her former tooth.
But let the frame of things disjoint, both the worlds suffer,
Ere we will eat our meal in fear and sleep

In the affliction of these terrible dreams
That shake us nightly: better be with the dead,
Whom we, to gain our peace, have sent to peace,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless ecstasy. Duncan is in his grave;
After life's fitful fever he sleeps well;
Treason has done his worst: nor steel, nor poison,
Malice domestic, foreign levy, nothing,
Can touch him further.

Lady M. Come on;

Gentle my lord, sleek o'er your rugged looks;
Be bright and jovial among your guests to-night.

Macb. So shall I, love; and so, I pray, be you:
Let your remembrance apply to Banquo;
Present him eminence, both with eye and tongue:
Unsafe the while, that we
Must lave our honours in these flattering streams,
And make our faces vizards to our hearts,
Disguising what they are.

Lady M. You must leave this.

Macb. O, full of scorpions is my mind, dear wife!
Thou know'st that Banquo, and his Fleance, lives.

Lady M. But in them nature's copy 's not eterne.

Macb. There 's comfort yet; they are assailable;
Then be thou jocund: ere the bat hath flown
His cloister'd flight, ere to black Hecate's summons
The shard-borne beetle with his drowsy hums
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note.

Lady M. What 's to be done?

Macb. Be innocent of the knowledge, dearest chuck,
Till thou applaud the deed. Come, seeling night,
Scarf up the tender eye of pitiful day;
And with thy bloody and invisible hand
Cancel and tear to pieces that great bond

30

40

Which keeps me pale! Light thickens; and the crow
Makes wing to the rooky wood: 50
Good things of day begin to droop and drowse;
Whiles night's black agents to their preys do rouse.
Thou marvell'st at my words: but hold thee still:
Things bad begun make strong themselves by ill.
So, prithee, go with me. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. A park near the palace.Enter three Murderers.First Mur. But who did bid thee join with us?Third Mur.

Macbeth.

Sec. Mur. He needs not our mistrust, since he delivers
Our offices and what we have to do
To the direction just.First Mur. Then stand with us.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day:
Now spurs the lated traveller apace
To gain the timely inn; and near approaches
The subject of our watch.

Third Mur.

Hark! I hear horses.

Ban. [Within] Give us a light there, ho!Sec. Mur.

Then 't is he: the rest

That are within the note of expectation 10
Already are i' the court.

First Mur. His horses go about.

Third Mur. Almost a mile: but he does usually,
So all men do, from hence to the palace gate
Make it their walk.

Sec. Mur. A light, a light!Enter BANQUO, and FLEANCE with a torch.Third Mur.

'T is he.

First Mur. Stand to 't.

Ban. It will be rain to-night.

First Mur.

Let it come down.

[They set upon Banquo.]

Ban. O, treachery! Fly, good Fleance, fly, fly, fly!
Thou mayst revenge. O slave! [Dies. Fleance escapes.]

Third Mur. Who did strike out the light?

First Mur.

Was 't not the way?

Third Mur. There 's but one down; the son is fled.

Sec. Mur.

We have lost

Best half of our affair.

21

First Mur. Well, let 's away, and say how much is done.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. Hall in the palace.

A banquet prepared. Enter MACBETH, LADY MACBETH, ROSS, LENNOX, Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. You know your own degrees; sit down: at first
And last the hearty welcome.

Lords.

Thanks to your majesty.

Macb. Ourself will mingle with society,
And play the humble host.
Our hostess keeps her state, but in best time
We will require her welcome.

Lady M. Pronounce it for me, sir, to all our friends;
For my heart speaks they are welcome.

First Murderer appears at the door.

Macb. See, they encounter thee with their hearts' thanks.
Both sides are even: here I 'll sit i' the midst: 10
Be large in mirth; anon we 'll drink a measure
The table round. [Approaching the door.] There 's blood upon thy face.

Mur. 'T is Banquo's then.

Macb. 'T is better thee without than he within.
Is he dispatch'd?

Mur. My lord, his throat is cut; that I did for him.

Macb. Thou art the best o' the cut-throats: yet he 's good
That did the like for Fleance: if thou didst it,
Thou art the nonpareil.

Mur. Most royal sir,
Fleance is 'scaped.

20

Macb. Then comes my fit again: I had else been perfect,
Whole as the marble, founded as the rock,
As broad and general as the casing air:
But now I am cabin'd, cribb'd, confined, bound in
To saucy doubts and fears. But Banquo 's safe?

Mur. Ay, my good lord; safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trenched gashes on his head;
The least a death to nature.

Macb. Thanks for that:
There the grown serpent lies; the worm that 's fled
Hath nature that in time will venom breed,
No teeth for the present. Get thee gone: to-morrow
We 'll hear, ourselves, again.

30

[Exit Murderer.]

Lady M. My royal lord,
You do not give the cheer: the feast is sold
That is not often vouch'd, while 't is a-making,
'T is given with welcome: to feed were best at home;
From thence the sauce to meat is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it.

Macb. Sweet remembrancer!
Now, good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both!

Len. May 't please your highness sit.

[The Ghost of Banquo enters, and sits in Macbeth's place.

Macb. Here had we now our country's honour roof'd, 40
Were the graced person of our Banquo present;

Who may I rather challenge for unkindness
Than pity for mischance!

Ross. His absence, sir,
Lays blame upon his promise. Please 't your highness
To grace us with your royal company.

Macb. The table 's full.

Len. Here is a place reserved, sir.

Macb. Where?

Len. Here, my good lord. What is 't that moves your highness?

Macb. Which of you have done this?

Lords. What, my good lord?

Macb. Thou canst not say I did it: never shake
Thy gory locks at me. 50

Ross. Gentlemen, rise; his highness is not well.

Lady M. Sit, worthy friends: my lord is often thus,
And hath been from his youth: pray you, keep seat;
The fit is momentary; upon a thought
He will again be well: if much you note him,
You shall offend him and extend his passion:
Feed, and regard him not. Are you a man?

Macb. Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on that
Which might appal the devil.

Lady M. O proper stuff! 60

This is the very painting of your fear:
This is the air-drawn dagger which, you said,
Led you to Duncan. O, these flaws and starts,
Impostors to true fear, would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire,
Authorized by her grandam. Shame itself!
Why do you make such faces? When all 's done,
You look but on a stool.

Macb. Prithee, see there! behold! look! lo! how say you?
Why, what care I? If thou canst nod, speak too. 70
If charnel-houses and our graves must send

Those that we bury back, our monuments
Shall be the maws of kites. [Ghost vanishes.]

Lady M. What, quite unmann'd in folly?

Macb. If I stand here, I saw him.

Lady M. Fie, for shame!

Macb. Blood hath been shed ere now, i' the olden time,
Ere humane statute purged the gentle weal;

Ay, and since too, murders have been perform'd

Too terrible for the ear: the time has been,

That, when the brains were out, the man would die,

And there an end; but now they rise again,

80

With twenty mortal murders on their crowns,

And push us from our stools: this is more strange

Than such a murder is.

Lady M. My worthy lord,

Your noble friends do lack you.

Macb. I do forget.

Do not muse at me, my most worthy friends;

I have a strange infirmity, which is nothing

To those that know me. Come, love and health to all;

Then I'll sit down. Give me some wine; fill full.

Enter Ghost.

I drink to the general joy o' the whole table,

And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss;

90

Would he were here! to all, and him, we thirst,

And all to all.

Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.

Macb. Avaunt! and quit my sight! let the earth hide thee!

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold;

Thou hast no speculation in those eyes

Which thou dost glare with!

Lady M. Think of this, good peers,

But as a thing of custom: 't is no other;

Only it spoils the pleasure of the time.

Macb. What man dare, I dare:
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear, 100
The arm'd rhinoceros, or the Hyrcan tiger;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble: or be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword;
If trembling I inhabit then, protest me
The baby of a girl. Hence, horrible shadow!
Unreal mockery, hence! [Ghost vanishes.]

Why, so: being gone,
I am a man again. Pray you, sit still.
Lady M. You have displaced the mirth, broke the good meeting,
With most admired disorder.

Macb. Can such things be, 110
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder? You make me strange
Even to the disposition that I owe,
When now I think you can behold such sights,
And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
When mine is blanch'd with fear.

Ross. What sights, my lord?

Lady M. I pray you, speak not; he grows worse and worse;
Question enrages him. At once, good night:
Stand not upon the order of your going,
But go at once.

Len. Good night; and better health 120
Attend his majesty!

Lady M. A kind good night to all!
[Exeunt all but Macbeth and Lady M.]

Macb. It will have blood; they say, blood will have blood:
Stones have been known to move and trees to speak;
Augurs and understood relations have

By magot-pies and choughs and rooks brought forth
The secret'st man of blood. What is the night?

Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which is which.

Macb. How say'st thou, that Macduff denies his person
At our great bidding?

Lady M. Did you send to him, sir?

Macb. I hear it by the way; but I will send: 130

There's not a one of them but in his house

I keep a servant fee'd. I will to-morrow,

And betimes I will, to the weird sisters:

More shall they speak; for now I am bent to know,

By the worst means, the worst. For mine own good,

All causes shall give way: I am in blood

Stepp'd in so far that, should I wade no more,

Returning were as tedious as go o'er:

Strange things I have in head, that will to hand;

Which must be acted ere they may be scann'd. 140

Lady M. You lack the season of all natures, sleep.

Macb. Come, we'll to sleep. My strange and self-abuse
Is the initiate fear that wants hard use:

We are yet but young in deed. [Exeunt.

[SCENE V. A heath.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches, meeting HECATE.

First Witch. Why, how now, Hecate! you look angerly.

Hec. Have I not reason, beldams as you are,

Saucy and overbold? How did you dare

To trade and traffic with Macbeth

In riddles and affairs of death;

And I, the mistress of your charms,

The close contriver of all harms,

Was never call'd to bear my part,

Or show the glory of our art?

And, which is worse, all you have done 150

Hath been but for a wayward son,
Spiteful and wrathful, who, as others do,
Loves for his own ends, not for you.
But make amends now: get you gone,
And at the pit of Acheron
Meet me i' the morning: thither he
Will come to know his destiny:
Your vessels and your spells provide,
Your charms and every thing beside.
I am for the air; this night I'll spend
Unto a dismal and a fatal end:
Great business must be wrought ere noon:
Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vaporous drop profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground:
And that distill'd by magic sleights
Shall raise such artificial sprites
As by the strength of their illusion
Shall draw him on to his confusion:
He shall spurn fate, scorn death, and bear
His hopes 'bove wisdom, grace and fear:
And you all know, security is mortals' chiefest enemy.

[Music and a song within: 'Come away, come away', &c.

Hark! I am call'd; my little spirit, see,
Sits in a foggy cloud, and stays for me. [Exit.

First Witch. Come, let's make haste; she'll soon be back again.] [Exeunt.

SCENE VI. Forres. The palace.

Enter LENNOX and another Lord.

Len. My former speeches have but hit your thoughts,
Which can interpret further: only, I say,
Things have been strangely borne. The gracious Duncan

Was pitied of Macbeth: marry, he was dead:
And the right-valiant Banquo walk'd too late;
Whom, you may say, if 't please you, Fleance kill'd,
For Fleance fled: men must not walk too late.
Who cannot want the thought how monstrous
It was for Malcolm and for Donalbain
To kill their gracious father? damned fact!
How it did grieve Macbeth! did he not straight
In pious rage the two delinquents tear,
That were the slaves of drink and thralls of sleep?
Was not that nobly done? Ay, and wisely too;
For 't would have anger'd any heart alive
To hear the men deny 't. So that, I say,
He has borne all things well: and I do think
That had he Duncan's sons under his key—
As, an 't please heaven, he shall not—they should find
What 't were to kill a father; so should Fleance. 10
But, peace! for from broad words and 'cause he fail'd
His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear
Macduff lives in disgrace: sir, can you tell
Where he bestows himself?

Lord.

The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,
Lives in the English court, and is received
Of the most pious Edward with such grace
That the malevolence of fortune nothing
Takes from his high respect: thither Macduff
Is gone to pray the holy king, upon his aid
To wake Northumberland and warlike Siward: 30
That, by the help of these—with Him above
To ratify the work—we may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives,
Do faithful homage and receive free honours:
All which we pine for now: and this report

Hath so exasperate their king that he Prepares for some attempt of war.

Len. Sent he to Macduff?

Lord. He did: and with an absolute 'Sir, not I', 40
The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums, as who should say 'You'll rue the time
That clogs me with this answer'.

Len. And that well might Advise him to a caution, to hold what distance
His wisdom can provide. Some holy angel
Fly to the court of England and unfold
His message ere he come, that a swift blessing
May soon return to this our suffering country
Under a hand accursed!

Lord. I'll send my prayers with him.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. A cavern. In the middle, a boiling cauldron.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

First Witch. Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.

Sec. Witch. Thrice, and once the hedge-pig whined.

Third Witch. Harpier cries 'T is time, 't is time.

First Witch. Round about the cauldron go;

In the poison'd entrails throw.

Toad, that under cold stone

Days and nights has thirty one

Swelter'd venom sleeping got,

Boil thou first i' the charmed pot.

All. Double, double toil and trouble;

Fire burn, and cauldron bubble.

Sec. Witch. Fillet of a fenny snake,

In the cauldron boil and bake;
Eye of newt and toe of frog,
Wool of bat and tongue of dog,
Adder's fork and blind-worm's sting,
Lizard's leg and howlet's wing,
For a charm of powerful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble.

All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire burn, and cauldron bubble. 20

Third Witch. Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf,
Witches' mummy, maw and gulf
Of the ravin'd salt-sea shark,
Root of hemlock digg'd i' the dark,
Liver of blaspheming Jew,
Gall of goat, and slips of yew
Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse,
Nose of Turk and Tartar's lips,
Finger of birth-strangled babe 30
Ditch-deliver'd by a drab,
Make the gruel thick and slab:
Add thereto a tiger's chaudron,
For the ingredients of our cauldron.

All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire burn, and cauldron bubble.

Sec. Witch. Cool it with a baboon's blood,
Then the charm is firm and good.

[Enter HECATE to the other three Witches.

Hec. O, well done! I commend your pains;
And every one shall share i' the gains: 40
And now about the cauldron sing,
Like elves and fairies in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in.

[Music and a song: 'Black spirits', &c.
Hecate retires.]

H² y the pricking of my thumbs, ed this way comes.
 en, locks,
 whoever knocks!

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. Now now, you secret, black, and midnight hags!
 What is 't you do?

All. A deed without a name.

Macb. I conjure you, by that which you profess, 50
 Howe'er you come to know it, answer me:
 Though you untie the winds and let them fight Against the churches; though the yesty waves
 Confound and swallow navigation up;
 Though bladed corn be lodged and trees blown down;
 Though castles topple on their warder's heads;
 Though palaces and pyramids do slope
 Their heads to their foundations; though the treasure
 Of nature's germens tumble all together,
 Even till destruction sicken; answer me 60
 To what I ask you.

First Witch. Speak.

Sec. Witch. Demand.

Third Witch. We'll answer.

First Witch. Say, if thou 'dst rather hear it from our mouths,
 Or from our masters?

Macb. Call 'em; let me see 'em.

First Witch. Pour in sow's blood, that hath eaten
 Her nine farrow; grease that 's sweaten
 From the murderer's gibbet throw
 Into the flame.

All. Come, high or low;
 Thyself and office deftly show!

Thunder. First Apparition: an armed Head.

Macb. Tell me, thou unknown power,—

First Witch. He knows thy thought:

Hear his speech, but say thou nought. 70

First App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth! beware Macduff;

Beware the thane of Fife. Dismiss me. Enough.

[Descends.

Macb. Whate'er thou art, for thy good caution, thanks;

Thou hast harp'd my fear aright: but one word more,—

First Witch. He will not be commanded: here's another,
More potent than the first.

Thunder. Second Apparition: a bloody Child.

Sec. App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth!

Macb. Had I three ears, I 'ld hear thee.

Sec. App. Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn

The power of man, for none of woman born 80

Shall harm Macbeth.

[Descends.

Macb. Then live, Macduff: what need I fear of thee?

But yet I 'll make assurance double sure,

And take a bond of fate: thou shalt not live;

That I may tell pale-hearted fear it lies,

And sleep in spite of thunder.

Thunder. Third Apparition: a Child crowned, with a tree in his hand.

What is this

'That rises like the issue of a king,

And wears upon his baby-brow the round

And top of sovereignty?

All.

Listen, but speak not to 't.

Third App. Be lion-mettled, proud; and take no care 90

Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are:

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be until

Great Birnam wood to high Dunsinane hill
Shall come against him.

[Descends.

Macb. That will never be:
Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Sweet bodements! good!
Rebellion's head, rise never till the wood
Of Birnam rise, and our high-placed Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature, pay his breath
To time and mortal custom. Yet my heart
Throbs to know one thing: tell me, if your art
Can tell so much: shall Banquo's issue ever Reign in this kingdom?

100

All. Seek to know no more.

Macb. I will be satisfied: deny me this,
And an eternal curse fall on you! Let me know.
Why sinks that cauldron? and what noise is this?

[Hautboys.

First Witch. Show!

Sec. Witch. Show!

Third Witch. Show!

All. Show his eyes, and grieve his heart;
Come like shadows, so depart!

110

A show of Eight Kings, the last with a glass in his hand; Banquo's Ghost following.

Macb. Thou art too like the spirit of Banquo; down!
Thy crown does sear mine eye-balls. And thy hair,
Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first.
A third is like the former. Filthy hags!
Why do you show me this? A fourth! Start, eyes!
What, will the line stretch out to the crack of doom?
Another yet! A seventh! I'll see no more:
And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass
Which shows me many more; and some I see
That two-fold balls and treble sceptres carry:

120

Horrible sight! Now, I see, 't is true;
For the blood-bolter'd Banquo smiles upon me,
And points at them for his. [Apparitions vanish.] What,
is this so?

[First Witch. Ay, sir, all this is so: but why Stands Macbeth thus amazedly?

Come, sisters, cheer we up his sprites,
And show the best of our delights:

I'll charm the air to give a sound,

While you perform your antic round;

130

That this great king may kindly say,

Our duties did his welcome pay.

[Music. The Witches dance, and then vanish, with Hecate]

Macb. Where are they? Gone? Let this pernicious hour
Stand aye accursed in the calendar!
Come in, without there!

Enter LENNOX.

Len. What's your grace's will?

Macb. Saw you the weird sisters?

Len. No, my lord.

Macb. Came they not by you?

Len. No, indeed, my lord.

Macb. Infected be the air whereon they ride;
And damn'd all those that trust them! I did hear
The galloping of horse: who was't came by?

140

Len. 'T is two or three, my lord, that bring you word
Macduff is fled to England.

Macb. Fled to England!

Len. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. Time, thou anticipatest my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose never is o'ertook
Unless the deed go with it: from this moment
The very firstlings of my heart shall be

The firstlings of my hand. And even now,
To crown my thoughts with acts, be it thought and done:
The castle of Macduff I will surprise; 150
Seize upon Fife; give to the edge o' the sword
His wife, his babes, and all unfortunate souls
That trace him in his line. No boasting like a fool;
This deed I'll do before this purpose cool.
But no more sights!—Where are these gentlemen?
Come, bring me where they are. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Fife. Macduff's castle.

Enter LADY MACDUFF, her Son, and ROSS.

L. Macd. What had he done, to make him fly the land?

Ross. You must have patience, madam.

L. Macd. He had none:

His flight was madness: when our actions do not,
Our fears do make us traitors.

Ross. You know not

Whether it was his wisdom or his fear.

L. Macd. Wisdom! to leave his wife, to leave his babes,
His mansion and his titles in a place

From whence himself does fly? He loves us not;

He wants the natural touch: for the poor wren,

The most diminutive of birds, will fight, 10

Her young ones in her nest, against the owl.

All is the fear and nothing is the love;

As little is the wisdom, where the flight

So runs against all reason.

Ross. My dearest coz,

I pray you, school yourself: but for your husband,

He is noble, wise, judicious, and best knows

The fits o' the season. I dare not speak much further;

But cruel are the times, when we are traitors

And do not know ourselves, when we hold rumour

From what we fear, yet know not what we fear, 20
But float upon a wild and violent sea
Each way and move. I take my leave of you:
Shall not be long but I'll be here again:
Things at the worst will cease, or else climb upward
To what they were before. My pretty cousin,
Blessing upon you!

L. Macd. Father'd he is, and yet he's fatherless.

Ross. I am so much a fool, should I stay longer,
It would be my disgrace and your discomfort:

I take my leave at once.

[Exit.

L. Macd. Sirrah, your father's dead: 30
And what will you do now? How will you live?

Son. As birds do, mother.

L. Macd. What, with worms and flies?

Son. With what I get, I mean; and so do they.

L. Macd. Poor bird! thou'ldst never fear the net nor lime,
The pitfall nor the gin.

Son. Why should I, mother? Poor birds they are not set for.

My father is not dead, for all your saying.

L. Macd. Yes, he is dead: how wilt thou do for a father?

Son. Nay, how will you do for a husband?

L. Macd. Why, I can buy me twenty at any market. 40

Son. Then you'll buy 'em to sell again.

L. Macd. Thou speak'st with all thy wit; and yet, i' faith,
With wit enough for thee.

Son. Was my father a traitor, mother?

L. Macd. Ay, that he was.

Son. What is a traitor?

L. Macd. Why, one that swears and lies.

Son. And be all traitors that do so?

L. Macd. Every one that does so is a traitor, and must be hanged. 50

Son. And must they all be hanged that swear and lie?

L. Macd. Every one.

Son. Who must hang them?

L. Macd. Why, the honest men.

Son. Then the liars and swearers are fools, for there are liars and swearers enow to beat the honest men and hang up them.

L. Macd. Now, God help thee, poor monkey? But how wilt thou do for a father? 60

Son. If he were dead, you 'ld weep for him: if you would not, it were a good sign that I should quickly have a new father.

L. Macd. Poor prattler, how thou talk'st!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect.
I doubt some danger does approach you nearly:
If you will take a homely man's advice,
Be not found here; hence, with your little ones.
To fright you thus, methinks, I am too savage; 70
To do worse to you were fell cruelty,
Which is too nigh your person. Heaven preserve you!
I dare abide no longer. [Exit.]

L. Macd. Whither should I fly?
I have done no harm. But I remember now
I am in this earthly world; where to do harm
Is often laudable, to do good sometime
Accounted dangerous folly: why then, alas,
Do I put up that womanly defence,
To say I have done no harm?

Enter Murderers.

What are these faces?

First Mur. Where is your husband?

80

L. Macd. I hope, in no place so unsanctified
Where such as thou mayst find him.

First Mur. He 's a traitor.

Son. Thou liest, thou shag-hair'd villain!

First Mur. What, you egg!
[Stabbing him.

Young fry of treachery!

Son. He has kill'd me, mother:

Run away, I pray you! [Dies.

[Exit Lady Macduff, crying 'Murder!'
Exeunt Murderers, following her.

SCENE III. England. Before the King's palace.

Enter MALCOLM and MACDUFF.

Mal. Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there
Weep our sad bosoms empty.

Macd. Let us rather
Hold fast the mortal sword, and like good men
Bestride our down-fall'n birthdom: each new morn
New widows howl, new orphans cry, new sorrows
Strike heaven on the face, that it resounds
As if it felt with Scotland and yell'd out
Like syllable of dolour.

Mal. What I believe I 'll wail,
What know believe, and what I can redress,
As I shall find the time to friend, I will. 10
When you have spoke, it may be so perchance.
This tyrant, whose sole name blisters our tongues,
Was once thought honest: you have loved him well.
He hath not touch'd you yet. I am young; but something
You may deserve of him through me, and wisdom
To offer up a weak poor innocent lamb
To appease an angry god.

Macd. I am not treacherous.

Mal. But Macbeth is.

A good and virtuous nature may recoil
In an imperial charge. But I shall crave your pardon; 20
That which you are my thoughts cannot transpose:
Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell:
Though all things foul would wear the brows of grace,
Yet grace must still look so.

Macd. I have lost my hopes.

Mal. Perchance even there where I did find my doubts.
Why in that rawness left you wife and child,
Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,
Without leave-taking? I pray you,
Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own safeties. You may be rightly just, 30
Whatever I shall think.

Macd. Bleed, bleed, poor country!
Great tyranny! lay thou thy basis sure,
For goodness dare not check thee: wear thou thy wrongs;
The title is affeer'd! Fare thee well, lord:
I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that 's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich East to boot.

Mal. Be not offended:
I speak not as in absolute fear of you.
I think our country sinks beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds; and each new day a gash 40
Is added to her wounds: I think withal
There would be hands uplifted in my right;
And here from gracious England have I offer
Of goodly thousands: but, for all this,
When I shall tread upon the tyrant's head,
Or wear it on my sword, yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before,

More suffer and more sundry ways than ever,
By him that shall succeed.

Macd. What should he be?

Mal. It is myself I mean: in whom I know 50
All the particulars of vice so grafted
That, when they shall be open'd, black Macbeth
Will seem as pure as snow, and the poor state Esteem him as a lamb, being compared
With my confineless harms.

Macd. Not in the legions
Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd
In evils to top Macbeth.

Mal. I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of every sin 60
That has a name: but there's no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust, and my desire
All continent impediments would o'erbear
That did oppose my will: better Macbeth
Than such an one to reign.

Macd. Boundless intemperance
In nature is a tyranny; it hath been
The untimely emptying of the happy throne
And fall of many kings. But fear not yet 70
To take upon you what is yours: you may Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may so hoodwink.
We have willing dames enough; there cannot be
That vulture in you, to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves,
Finding it so inclined.

Mal. With this there grows
In my most ill-composed affection such

A staunchless avarice that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands,
Desire his jewels and this other's house:
And my more-having would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more; that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth.

80

Macd. This avarice
Sticks deeper, grows with more pernicious root
Than summer-seeming lust, and it hath been
The sword of our slain kings: yet do not fear;
Scotland hath foisons to fill up your will,
Of your mere own: all these are portable,
With other graces weigh'd.

90

Mal. But I have none: the king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them, but abound
In the division of each several crime,
Acting it many ways. Nay, had I power, I should Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,
Uproar the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth.

Macd. O Scotland, Scotland!

100

Mal. If such a one be fit to govern, speak:
I am as I have spoken.

Macd. Fit to govern!
No, not to live. O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant bloody-scepter'd,
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again,
Since that the truest issue of thy throne
By his own interdiction stands accursed,
And does blaspheme his breed? Thy royal father
Was a most sainted king: the queen that bore thee,

Oftener upon her knees than on her feet,
 Died every day she lived. Fare thee well!
 These evils thou repeat'st upon thyself
 Have banish'd me from Scotland. O my breast,
 Thy hope ends here!

110

Mal. Macduff, this noble passion,
 Child of integrity, hath from my soul

Wiped the black scruples, reconciled my thoughts

To thy good truth and honour. Devilish Macbeth

By many of these trains hath sought to win me

Into his power, and modest wisdom plucks me

From over-credulous haste: but God above

120

Deal between thee and me! for even now

I put myself to thy direction, and

Unspeak mine own detraction, here abjure

The taints and blames I laid upon myself,

For strangers to my nature. I am yet

Unknown to woman, never was forsworn,

Scarcely have coveted what was mine own,

At no time broke my faith, would not betray

The devil to his fellow, and delight

No less in truth than life: my first false speaking

130

Was this upon myself: what I am truly,

Is thine and my poor country's to command:

Whither indeed, before thy here-approach,

Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,

Already at a point, was setting forth.

Now we'll together; and the chance of goodness

Be like our warranted quarrel! Why are you silent?

Macd. Such welcome and unwelcome things at once
 'T is hard to reconcile.

Enter a Doctor.

Mal. Well; more anon.—Comes the king forth, I pray you?

140

Doct. Ay, sir; there are a crew of wretched souls
That stay his cure: their malady convinces
The great assay of art; but at his touch—
Such sanctity hath heaven given his hand—
They presently amend.

Mal. I thank you, doctor. [Exit Doctor.]

Macd. What 's the disease he means?

Mal. 'T is call'd the evil:
A most miraculous work in this good king;
Which often, since my here-remain in England,
I have seen him do. How he solicits heaven,
Himself best knows: but strangely-visited people, 150
All swoln and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures,
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers: and 't is spoken,
To the succeeding royalty he leaves
The healing benediction. With this strange virtue,
He hath a heavenly gift of prophecy,
And sundry blessings hang about his throne
That speak him full of grace.

Enter Ross.

Macd. See, who comes here?

Mal. My countryman; but yet I know him not. 160

Macd. My ever-gentle cousin, welcome hither.

Mal. I know him now. Good God, betimes remove
The means that makes us strangers!

Ross. Sir, amen.

Macd. Stands Scotland where it did?

Ross. Alas, poor country!
Almost afraid to know itself. It cannot
Be call'd our mother, but our grave; where nothing,
But who knows nothing, is once seen to smile;
Where sighs and groans and shrieks that rend the air

Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems
A modern ecstasy: the dead man's knell 170
Is there scarce ask'd for who; and good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying or ere they sicken.

Macd. O, relation
Too nice, and yet too true!

Mal. What's the newest grief?

Ross. That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker:
Each minute teems a new one.

Macd. How does my wife?

Ross. Why, well.

Macd. And all my children?

Ross. Well too.

Macd. The tyrant has not batter'd at their peace?

Ross. No; they were well at peace when I did leave 'em.

Macd. Be not a niggard of your speech: how goes 't? 180

Ross. When I came hither to transport the tidings,
Which I have heavily borne, there ran a rumour
Of many worthy fellows that were out;
Which was to my belief witness'd the rather,
For that I saw the tyrant's power a-foot:
Now is the time of help; your eye in Scotland
Would create soldiers, make our women fight,
To doff their dire distresses.

Mal. Be't their comfort
We are coming thither: gracious England hath
Lent us good Siward and ten thousand men; 190
An older and a better soldier none
That Christendom gives out.

Ross. Would I could answer
This comfort with the like! But I have words
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not latch them.

Macd. What concern they?

The general cause? or is it a fee-grief
Due to some single breast?

Ross. No mind that's honest
But in it shares some woe; though the main part
Pertains to you alone.

Macd. If it be mine,
Keep it not from me, quickly let me have it. 200

Ross. Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

Macd. Hum! I guess at it.

Ross. Your castle is surprised; your wife and babes
Savagely slaughter'd: to relate the manner,
Were, on the quarry of these murder'd deer,
To add the death of you.

Mal. Merciful heaven!
What, man! ne'er pull your hat upon your brows;
Give sorrow words; the grief that does not speak
Whispers the o'er-fraught heart and bids it break. 210

Macd. My children too?

Ross. Wife, children, servants, all
That could be found.

Macd. And I must be from thence!
My wife kill'd too?

Ross. I have said.

Mal. Be comforted.
Let's make us medicines of our great revenge,
To cure this deadly grief.

Macd. He has no children. All my pretty ones?
Did you say all? O hell-kite! All?
What, all my pretty chickens and their dam
At one fell swoop?

Mal. Dispute it like a man.

Macd. I shall do so; 220
But I must also feel it as a man:

I cannot but remember such things were,
That were most precious to me. Did heaven look on,
And would not take their part? Sinful Macduff,
They were all struck for thee! naught that I am,
Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
Fell slaughter on their souls. Heaven rest them now!

Mal. Be this the whetstone of your sword: let grief
Convert to anger; blunt not the heart, enrage it.

Macd. O, I could play the woman with mine eyes 230
And braggart with my tongue! But, gentle heavens,
Cut short all intermission; front to front
Bring thou this fiend of Scotland and myself;
Within my sword's length set him; if he 'scape,
Heaven forgive him too!

Mal. This tune goes manly.
Come, go we to the king; our power is ready;
Our lack is nothing but our leave: Macbeth
Is ripe for shaking, and the powers above 238
Put on their instruments. Receive what cheer you may:
The night is long that never finds the day. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. Dunsinane. Ante-room in the castle.

Enter a Doctor of Physic and a Waiting-Gentlewoman.

Doct. I have two nights watched with you, but can perceive no truth in your report. When was it she last walked?

Gent. Since his majesty went into the field, I have seen her rise from her bed, throw her nightgown upon her, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon 't, read it, afterwards seal it, and again return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep. 9

Doct. A great perturbation in nature, to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching! In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her say?

Gent. That, sir, which I will not report after her.

Doct. You may to me: an 't is most meet you should.

Gent. Neither to you nor any one; having no witness to confirm my speech. 21

Enter LADY MACBETH, with a taper.

Lo you, here she comes! This is her very guise; and, upon my life, fast asleep. Observe her; stand close.

Doct. How came she by that light?

Gent. Why, it stood by her: she has light by her continually; 't is her command.

Doct. You see, her eyes are open.

Gent. Ay, but their sense is shut.

Doct. What is it she does now? Look, how she rubs her hands. 31

Gent. It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands: I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour.

Lady M. Yet here 's a spot.

Doct. Hark! she speaks: I will set down what comes from her, to satisfy my remembrance the more strongly. 38

Lady M. Out, damned spot! out, I say!—One: two: why, then 't is time to do 't.—Hell is murky!—Fie, my lord, fie! a soldier, and afeard? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?—Yet who would have thought the old man to have had so much blood in him?

Doct. Do you mark that?

Lady M. The thane of Fife had a wife: where is she now?—What, will these hands ne'er be clean?—No more o' that, my lord, no more o' that: you mar all with this starting. 50

Doct. Go to, go to; you have known what you should not Gent. She has spoke what she should not, I am sure of that: heaven knows what she has known.

Lady M. Here 's the smell of the blood still: all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand. Oh, oh, oh!

58

Doct. What a sigh is there! The heart is sorely charged.

Gent. I would not have such a heart in my bosom for the dignity of the whole body.

Doct. Well, well, well,—

Gent. Pray God it be, sir.

Doct. This disease is beyond my practice: yet I have known those which have walked in their sleep who have died holily in their beds.

Lady M. Wash your hands, put on your nightgown; look not so pale.—I tell you yet again, Banquo 's buried: he cannot come out on 's grave.

71

Doct. Even so?

Lady M. To bed, to bed! there 's knocking at the gate, come, come, come, come, give me your hand. What 's done cannot be undone.—To bed, to bed, to bed! [Exit.

Doct. Will she go now to bed?

Gent. Directly.

Doct. Foul whisperings are abroad: unnatural deeds

Do breed unnatural troubles: infected minds

80

To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets:

More needs she the divine than the physician.

God, God, forgive us all! Look after her;

Remove from her the means of all annoyance,

And still keep eyes upon her. So, good night:

My mind she has mated, and amazed my sight.

I think, but dare not speak.

Gent.

Good night, good doctor.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. The country near Dunsinane.

Drum and colours. Enter MENTEITH, CAITHNESS, ANGUS, LENNOX, and Soldiers.

Ment. The English power is near, led on by Malcolm,
His uncle Siward and the good Macduff:
Revenge burn in them; for their dear causes
Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm
Excite the mortified man.

Ang. Near Birnam wood
Shall we meet them; that way are they coming.

Caith. Who knows if Donalbain be with his brother?

Len. For certain, sir, he is not: I have a file
Of all the gentry: there is Siward's son,
And many unrough youths that even now 10
Protest their first of manhood.

Ment. What does the tyrant?

Caith. Great Dunsinane he strongly fortifies:
Some say he's mad; others that lesser hate him
Do call it valiant fury: but, for certain,
He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause
Within the belt of rule.

Ang. Now does he feel
His secret murders sticking on his hands;
Now minutely revolts upbraid his faith-breach;
Those he commands move only in command,
Nothing in love: now does he feel his title 20
Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe
Upon a dwarfish thief.

Ment. Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn
Itself for being there?

Caith. Well, march we on,
To give obedience where 't is truly owed:

Meet we the medicine of the sickly weal,
And with him pour we in our country's purge
Each drop of us.

Len. Or so much as it needs,
To dew the sovereign flower and drown the weeds. 30
Make we our march towards Birnam. [Exeunt, marching.]

SCENE III. Dunsinane. A room in the castle.

Enter MACBETH, Doctor, and Attendants.

Macb. Bring me no more reports; let them fly all:
Till Birnam wood remove to Dunsinane,
I cannot taint with fear. What's the boy Malcolm?
Was he not born of woman? The spirits that know
All mortal consequences have pronounced me thus:
'Fear not, Macbeth; no man that's born of woman
Shall e'er have power upon thee'. Then fly, false thanes,
And mingle with the English epicures:
The mind I sway by and the heart I bear
Shall never sag with doubt nor shake with fear. 10

Enter a Servant.

The devil damn thee black, thou cream-faced loon!
Where got'st thou that goose look?

Serv. There is ten thousand—

Macb. Geese, villain?

Serv. Soldiers, sir.

Macb. Go prick thy face, and over-red thy fear,
Thou lily-liver'd boy. What soldiers, patch?
Death of thy soul! those linen cheeks of thine
Are counsellors to fear. What soldiers, wheyface?

Serv. The English force, so please you.

Macb. Take thy face hence. [Exit Servant.]

Seyton!—I am sick at heart,
When I behold—Seyton, I say!—This push 20

Will cheer me ever, or disease me now.
I have lived long enough: my way of life
Is fall'n into the sear, the yellow leaf;
And that which should accompany old age,
As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,
I must not look to have; but, in their stead,
Curses, not loud but deep, mouth-honour, breath,
Which the poor heart would fain deny, and dare not.
Seyton!

Enter SEYTON.

Sey. What is your gracious pleasure?

Mach. What news more?

Sey. All is confirm'd, my lord, which was reported. 31

Mach. I'll fight till from my bones my flesh be hack'd.
Give me my armour.

Sey. 'T is not needed yet.

Mach. I'll put it on.

Send out moe horses; skirr the country round;
Hang those that talk of fear. Give me mine armour.
How does your patient, doctor?

Doct. Not so sick, my lord,
As she is troubled with thick-coming fancies,
That keep her from her rest.

Mach. Cure her of that.

Canst thou not minister to a mind diseased,
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the brain,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart?

Doct. Therein the patient
Must minister to himself.

Mach. Throw physic to the dogs; I'll none of it.
Come, put mine armour on; give me my staff.
Seyton, send out. Doctor, the thanes fly from me

Come, sir, dispatch. If thou couldst, doctor, cast
The water of my land, find her disease,
And purge it to a sound and pristine health,
I would applaud thee to the very echo,
That should applaud again.—Pull 't off, I say.—
What rhubarb, senna, or what purgative drug,
Would scour these English hence? Hear'st thou of them?

Doct. Ay, my good lord; your royal preparation
Makes us hear something.

Macb. Bring it after me.
I will not be afraid of death and bane,
Till Birnam forest come to Dunsinane.

60

Doct. [Aside] Were I from Dunsinane away and clear, Profit again should hardly draw me here. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Country near Birnam wood.

Drum and colours. Enter MALCOLM, old SIWARD, and his Son, MACDUFF, MENTEITH, CAITHNESS, ANGUS, LENNOX, ROSS, and Soldiers, marching.

Mal. Cousins, I hope the days are near at hand
That chambers will be safe.

Ment. We doubt it nothing.

Siw. What wood is this before us?

Ment. The wood of Birnam.

Mal. Let every soldier hew him down a bough
And bear 't before him: thereby shall we shadow
The numbers of our host and make discovery
Err in report of us.

Soldiers. It shall be done.

Siw. We learn no other but the confident tyrant Keeps still in Dunsinane, and will endure
Our setting down before 't.

Mal. 'T is his main hope: 10
For where there is advantage to be given,

Both more and less have given him the revolt,
And none serve with him but constrained things
Whose hearts are absent too.

Macd. Let our just censures Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious soldiership.

Siw. The time approaches
That will with due decision make us know
What we shall say we have and what we owe.
Thoughts speculative their unsure hopes relate,
But certain issue strokes must arbitrate: 20
Towards which advance the war. [Exeunt, marching.]

SCENE V. Dunsinane. Within the castle.

Enter MACBETH, SEYTON, and Soldiers, with drum and colours.

Macb. Hang out our banners on the outward walls;
The cry is still 'They come': our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie
Till famine and the ague eat them up:
Were they not forced with those that should be ours,
We might have met them dareful, beard to beard,
And beat them backward home. [A cry of women within.
What is that noise?

Sey. It is the cry of women, my good lord. [Exit.]

Macb. I have almost forgot the taste of fears:
The time has been, my senses would have cool'd 10
To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir
As life were in 't: I have supp'd full with horrors;
Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts,
Cannot once start me.

Re-enter SEYTON.

Wherefore was that cry?

Sey. The queen, my lord, is dead.

Macb. She should have died hereafter;
There would have been a time for such a word.
To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day
To the last syllable of recorded time,
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Out, out, brief candle!
Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage
And then is heard no more: it is a tale
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,
Signifying nothing.

20

Enter a Messenger.

Thou comest to use thy tongue; thy story quickly.

Mess. Gracious my lord,
I should report that which I say I saw,
But know not how to do it.

30

Macb. Well, say, sir.

Mess. As I did stand my watch upon the hill,
I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought,
The wood began to move.

Macb. Liar and slave!

Mess. Let me endure your wrath, if 't be not so:
Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I say, a moving grove,

Macb. If thou speak'st false,
Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive,
Till famine cling thee: if thy speech be sooth,
I care not if thou dost for me as much.

40

I pull in resolution, and begin
To doubt the equivocation of the fiend
That lies like truth: 'Fear not, till Birnam wood
Do come to Dunsinane': and now a wood

Comes toward Dunsinane. Arm, arm, and out
If this which he avouches does appear,
There is nor flying hence nor tarrying here.
I gin to be awarey of the sun,
And wish the estate o' the world were now undone. 50
Ring the alarum-bell! Blow, wind! come, wrack!
At least we 'll die with harness on our back. [Exeunt]

SCENE VI. Dunsinane. Before the castle.

Drum and colours. Enter MALCOLM, old SIWARD, MACDUFF, and their Army, with boughs.

Mal. Now near enough: your leavy screens throw down,
And show like those you are. You, worthy uncle,
Shall, with my cousin, your right-noble son,
Lead our first battle: worthy Macduff and we Shall take upon 's what else remains to do,
According to our order.

Siw. Fare you well.
Do we but find the tyrant's power to-night,
Let us be beaten, if we cannot fight.

Macd. Make all our trumpets speak; give them all breath,
Those clamorous harbingers of blood and death. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. Another part of the field.

Alarums. Enter MACBETH.

Macb. They have tied me to a stake; I cannot fly,
But, bear-like, I must fight the course. What 's he
That was not born of woman? Such a one
Am I to fear, or none.

Enter young SIWARD.

Yo. Siw. What is thy name?

Macb. Thou 'lt be afraid to hear it.

Yo. Siw. No; though thou call'st thyself a hotter name
Than any is in hell.

Macb. My name's Macbeth.

Yo. Siw. The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear.

Macb. No, nor more fearful.

Yo. Siw. Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my sword 10
I'll prove the lie thou speak'st.

[They fight and young Siward is slain.]

Macb. Thou wast born of woman.

But swords I smile at, weapons laugh to scorn,
Brandish'd by man that's of a woman born. [Exit.

Alarums. Enter MACDUFF.

Macd. That way the noise is. Tyrant, show thy face!
If thou be'st slain and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still.
I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms
Are hired to bear their staves: either thou, Macbeth,
Or else my sword with an unbatter'd edge
I sheathe again undeeded. There thou shouldst be; 20
By this great clatter, one of greatest note
Seems bruited. Let me find him, fortune!
And more I beg not. [Exit. Alarums.

Enter MALCOLM and old SIWARD.

Siw. This way, my lord; the castle's gently render'd:
The tyrant's people on both sides do fight;
The noble thanes do bravely in the war;
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do.

Mal. We have met with foes
That strike beside us.

Siw. Enter, sir, the castle.

SCENE VIII. Another part of the field.Enter MACBETH.

Macb. Why should I play the Roman fool, and die
On mine own sword? whiles I see lives, the gashes
Do better upon them.

Enter MACDUFF.

Macd. Turn, hell-hound, turn!

Macb. Of all men else I have avoided thee:
But get thee back; my soul is too much charged
With blood of thine already.

Macd. I have no words:
My voice is in my sword: thou bloodier villain
Than terms can give thee out! [They fight.]

Macb. Thou lovest labour:
As easy mayst thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress as make me bleed: 10
Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests;
I bear a charmed life, which must not yield
To one of woman born.

Macd. Despair thy charm;
And let the angel whom thou still hast served
Tell thee, Macduff was from his mother's womb Untimely ripp'd.

Macb. Accursed be that tongue that tells me so,
For it hath cow'd my better part of man!
And be these juggling fiends no more believed,
That palter with us in a double sense; 20
That keep the word of promise to our ear,
And break it to our hope. I'll not fight with thee.

Macd. Then yield thee, coward,
And live to be the show and gaze o' the time:
We'll have thee, as our rarer monsters are,

Painted upon a pole, and underwrit,
'Here may you see the tyrant'.

Macb. I will not yield,
To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet,
And to be baited with the rabble's curse.
Though Birnam wood be come to Dunsinane, 30
And thou opposed, being of no woman born,
Yet I will try the last. Before my body
I throw my warlike shield. Lay on, Macduff,
And damn'd be him that first cries 'Hold, enough!'
[Exeunt, fighting. Alarums.]

Retreat. Flourish. Enter, with drum and colours, MALCOLM, old SIWARD, ROSS, the other Thanes, and Soldiers.

Mal. I would the friends we miss were safe arrived.

Siw. Some must go off: and yet, by these I see,
So great a day as this is cheaply bought.

Mal. Macduff is missing, and your noble son.

Ross. Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt:
He only lived but till he was a man; 40
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he died.

Siw. Then he is dead?

Ross. Ay, and brought off the field: your cause of sorrow
Must not be measured by his worth, for then
It hath no end.

Siw. Had he his hurts before?

Ross. Ay, on the front.

Siw. Why then, God's soldier be he!
Had I as many sons as I have hairs,

I would not wish them to a fairer death:
And so, his knell is knoll'd.

Mal. He's worth more sorrow, 50
And that I'll spend for him.

Siw. He's worth no more:
They say he parted well, and paid his score:
And so, God be with him! Here comes newer comfort.

Re-enter MACDUFF, with MACBETH'S head.

Macd. Hail, king! for so thou art: behold, where stands
The usurper's cursed head: the time is free:
I see thee compass'd with thy kingdom's pearl,
That speak my salutation in their minds;
Whose voices I desire aloud with mine:
Hail, King of Scotland!

All. Hail, King of Scotland! [Flourish.]

Mal. We shall not spend a large expense of time 60
Before we reckon with your several loves,
And make us even with you. My thanes and kinsmen,
Henceforth be earls, the first that ever Scotland
In such an honour named. What's more to do,
Which would be planted newly with the time,
As calling home our exiled friends abroad
That fled the snares of watchful tyranny;
Producing forth the cruel ministers
Of this dead butcher and his fiend-like queen,
Who, as 't is thought, by self and violent hands 70
Took off her life; this, and what needful else
That calls upon us, by the grace of Grace,
We will perform in measure, time and place:
So, thanks to all at once and to each one,
Whom we invite to see us crown'd at Scone.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]

NOTES.

These Notes should be used with the Glossary, to which the student is referred for all matters of merely verbal interpretation.

The symbols F1, F2, F3, F4 are used to denote the folio editions of 1623, 1632, 1664, and 1685. Ff. denotes the consent of all these.

Reference on points of grammar is made to the sections of the 3rd edition of Dr. Abbott's Shakespearian Grammar; for passages from other plays to Macmillan's Globe edition of the poet.

Dramatis Personæ. This list is not in the Ff. It was first given by Rowe.

Act I.—Scene I.

The division into Acts and Scenes is found in the Ff., but no notes of locality are there given. Most of the stage-directions are also from the Ff.

A desert place. So the Cambridge editors. Line 6 shows that this scene does not take place "upon the heath", where the witches afterwards meet Macbeth.

The play opens fittingly in an atmosphere of moral and physical gloom. The first scene, as Coleridge pointed out, strikes a spiritual key-note. This is a tragedy of the triumph of evil: we are in a world of moral anarchy, symbolized by the withered beings, to whom "foul is fair". In a drama, first impressions are lasting, and Shakespeare contrives to put the spectator in the right mood at once.

7. This line may be scanned as follows: "There' to | meet' | with' Mac | beth'". On the metre of the Witch-scenes in general, see Essay on Metre, § 1.

8-11. In the Ff. these lines run:—

"1. I come, Gray-Malkin.

All. Paddock calls anon; faire is foule, and foule is faire".

The correction is due to Hunter.

Graymalkin, a cat, and Paddock, a frog or toad (see Glossary, s.vv.), are the familiars of two of the three witches. The familiar of the third witch, Harpier, is mentioned in iv. 1. 3. Upon the stage, of course, there will be unearthly mewing and so forth, which the witches are supposed to answer.

These familiars of wizards and witches were supposed to be devils attendant upon them in the shape of obscene creatures. Cf. King

James the First's Demonologie (ed. 1616), p. 103, "To some of the baser sort he obliges himself to appeare at their calling upon him, by such a proper name which he shews unto them, either in likeness of a Dog, a Cat, an Ape, or such-like other beast, or else to answer by a voice only": and Reginald Scot, Discovery of Witchcraft, bk. 1. ch. 4, "Some say they can keep devils and spirits in the likenesse of todes and cats".

Scene 2.

A camp near Forres. The locality is taken from Holinshed.

In this scene Shakespeare, after his manner, puts us briefly in possession of the situation between Macbeth and Duncan. Macbeth is high in favour with the king, and, with the aid of Banquo, has repelled in one day rebels at home and foes from abroad. The best side of his character, his personal courage and resource in war, is brought out. He is "valour's minion" and "Bellona's bridegroom".

The irregular metre of this scene, and the discrepancies concerning the thane of Cawdor and the mission of Ross (see notes on line 53; 3. 73, 108; 1. 4, 4), have led editors to believe that we only possess the play in a mutilated form. See Introduction, pp. 7, 8. Some of the metrical difficulties can be explained, and some disappear with a simple rearrangement of the Ff. lines, but lines 20, 51 certainly suggest 'cuts'.

1. bloody. "This word 'bloody' reappears on almost every page, and runs like a red thread through the whole piece; in no other of Shakespeare's dramas is it so frequent." (Bodenstedt.)

3. sergeant must be scanned as equivalent to a trisyllable. A sergeant was not originally a petty officer, but a personal attendant on the king or commander, lower in rank than an esquire. It is hardly necessary, with the Cambridge editors, to read Sergeant for the Captain of the Ff. stage-direction. Steevens suggests that Shakespeare caught up the word sergeant from Holinshed's mention of a 'sergeant-at-arms' slain by Macdonwald.

5. The omission of a syllable may often be accounted for by the interposition of a natural pause, as here, where the speaker turns from one hearer to another; or, as in line 7, between two speeches. Or, as an alternative, Hail may be so emphasized as to dispense with an unaccented syllable.

9. choke their art, i.e. render it useless. The sense of choke here is metaphorical, but the word is suggested by the fact that the swimmers themselves will be literally choked by drowning.

Macdonwald. So F1. Holinshed has Macdonwald.

10. for to that, i.e. because. A more usual form is for that, cf. iv. 3. 185. That is added to give a conjunctive force to the preposition; but for by itself can have the sense of 'because'. See Abbott, Sh. Gr. §§ 151, 287.

12. the western isles, the group of islands lying west of Ross, of which Lewis is the chief. Perhaps, however, Ireland is included.

13. Of is used by Shakespeare after verbs of supplying and filling. See Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 171, and cf. Merchant of Venice, ii. 2. 24, "I am provided of a torch-bearer".

kerns and gallowglasses. These names frequently recur in descriptions of Ireland: properly kerns are light-armed, gallow-glasses heavy-armed infantry; here they are both used in a depreciatory sense, as in Richard II. ii. 1. 155—

"Now for our Irish wars;

We must supplant those rough rug-headed kerns".

14. quarrel. Ff. have quarry. The emendation is Hanmer's, and is justified by the parallel passage in Holinshed. Quarrel is frequent in the sense of 'cause', as in iv. 3. 137, "our warranted quarrel". Those who would retain quarry explain "his damned quarry" as 'his army, which is condemned to become Macbeth's prey'.

15. Show'd like, i.e. wore the false appearance of. Cf. i. 3. 54, "which outwardly ye show". For the metaphor cf. King John, iii. 1. 54—

"But Fortune, O,

She is corrupted, changed, won from thee,
She adulterates hourly with thine uncle John".

16. that name, i.e. the name of 'brave'.

20. The irregular line may be due to the haste and excitement of the speaker; but it is more likely that there has been some mutilation, which would also account for the difficulty in the next line.

21. Which. The only possible antecedent, so far as the sense goes, is Macbeth, and not the slave. Capell wished to read And ne'er. Perhaps some lines have been cut out here.

22. navel. So Ff. Hanmer wished to read nape, and thus make the blow less heroic. Moreover nave is not elsewhere used for 'navel'. But the Ff. text is supported by Nash, Dido, Queen of Carthage, act ii. p. 58 (ed. Dyce)—

"Then from the navel to the throat at once
He ript old Priam".

24. cousin. The word is often merely a title of courtesy given by the king to his nobles, or by them to each other: cf. i. 3. 127. But, according to Holinshed, Duncan and Macbeth were actually first cousins, each being son of one of the two daughters of King Malcolm.

25. The comparison is between the moment of victory, which was also the moment for a new attack, and the east, the quarter of sunrise, from which storms often come.

30. skipping. The epithet is scornful of the kerns. They were light-armed and also cowardly. It is used of Richard II. in 1 Henry IV. iii. 2. 60—

“The skipping king, he ambled up and down
With shallow jesters and rash bavin wits”.

31. surveying vantage, i.e. perceiving a favourable opportunity.

34. captains must be scanned as a trisyllable, like sergeant in line 3.

Yes, upon the stage, will receive an ironical intonation.

37, 38. The Ff. read—

“As cannons overcharged with double cracks,
So they doubly redoubled strokes upon the foe”.

This gives line 38 a superfluous foot. Several attempts at correction have been made. The Cambridge editors, following Keightley, print So they as the last words of a mutilated line; but the sense is complete as the lines stand. The arrangement of the text is less jarring, rhythmically, than that of the Ff.

37. cracks. Shakespeare uses the word of any sudden burst of sound; here of the discharge of cannon; in The Tempest, i. 2. 203, of thunder. In iv. i. 117 of this play occurs the phrase “the crack of doom”. The idea is expanded in Antony and Cleopatra, v. i. 14, where Cæsar says of the dead Antony—

“The breaking of so great a thing should make A greater crack”.

38. Doubly redoubled. Cf. Richard II. i. 3. 80, “blows, doubly redoubled”.

40. memorize, i.e. make memorable: Golgotha signifies “the place of a skull”. Cf. S. Matthew, xxvii. 33.

41. The irregular line has a dramatic point. The soldier breaks off, unable to proceed for loss of blood.

Enter Ross and Angus. So Ff. Angus does not speak, nor is he spoken to, but the “we are sent” of i. 3. 100 shows that he was present.

47. seems to speak. Critics say that this cannot mean ‘seems about to speak’, and suggest seems to speak (Johnson), or comes to speak (Collier). Yet the meaning is clear. Ross bore a strange message in his face, which was apparent even before he spoke. Cf. i. 5. 63—

“Your face, my thane, is as a book where men
May read strange matters”;

and Richard II. iii. 2. 194—

"Men judge by the complexion of the sky
 The state and inclination of the day;
 So may you by my dull and heavy eye,
 My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say";

and Henry IV. iii. 2. 162, "How now, good Blunt, thy looks are full of speed".

49. The Norwegian banners have been captured when Ross speaks, and Malone explains "the colours idly flapped about serving only to cool the conquerors instead of being proudly displayed by their former possessors". But the phrase flout the air certainly seems to imply defiance not defeat; cf. King John, v. 1. 72, "Mocking the air, with colours idly spread"; and, if so, we must suppose that Ross is referring, in a vivid historic present, to the moment of the first attack, when the Scotch were "cold" with alarm.

51. Here again there would seem to be a gap in the text.

53. There is a superfluous syllable in this line after the second foot, as well as at the end.

"The thane' | of Caw'(dor) | began' | a dis' | mal con'(flict)."

There are discrepancies in the references to the thane of Cawdor and his fate made here and in the following scenes; cf. notes to i. 3. 73, 108; i. 4. 4.

54. Bellona, the Roman goddess of war.

lapped in proof, clad in strong armour: cf. Glossary, s.vv. lapped and proof.

55. self-comparisons, i.e. comparisons between their two selves. Self can modify the sense of a word with which it is compounded in almost any fashion. Thus "self-borne arms" in Richard II. ii. 3. 80, i.e. arms divided against themselves, civil war.

56. Theobald corrected the Ff. punctuation, Point against point, rebellious arm 'gainst arm.

58. We may have here one twelve-syllable line, excused by the overlapping of speeches; or That now may be a short introductory line; cf. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 511.

That is often used for 'so that' in Shakespeare. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 283, and cf. i. 7. 8; ii. 2. 7, 23; iv. 3. 6, 82.

61. Saint Colme's inch, or 'Inchcolm', the Isle of St. Columba, in the Firth of Forth. Inis is Celtic for an island.

64. The additional foot in this line makes it very awkward to scan.

Scene 3.

A heath near Forres. This note of locality is in accordance with the indications of i. 1. 6 and i. 3. 39, 77.

This is the critical scene of the First Act, the Temptation Scene. The doubtful suggestions of the witches do but outwardly symbolize the secret workings of Macbeth's own heart. He is not now for the first time tempted; the "supernatural soliciting" echoes dark hopes already formed; murder has been for some time fantastical in his thoughts. He has even, at a period before the play opens, broken his enterprise to his wife (i. 7. 48). There is a remarkable contrast between the effect which the meeting with the weird sisters has upon Macbeth and Banquo respectively. Banquo sees nothing ominous in the prophecy; after all Macbeth is Duncan's cousin and a great warrior; he might well, by the customs of a military nation, be chosen for the throne before the boy Malcolm. But for Macbeth, it points at once to his own half-formed designs; and the partial fulfilment, which the message of Ross announces, perturbs him still more. For the present, however, he is content to wait, in hope that chance will bring him the coveted dignity without his stir. It should be noticed also that Banquo is curious as to the nature of the weird sisters; he inclines to think them bubbles of the earth, or creatures merely imaginary. Macbeth has no such doubts; the witches are in keeping with his mood; his only anxiety is to learn more from their supernatural knowledge.

2. Killing swine. The accusation against witches of casting an evil eye upon swine and other domestic animals appears to have been a very common one; cf. Scot, bk. ii. ch. 9.

6. Aoint thee: so F 1, F 2; F 3, F 4 read Anoint thee. Scot, bk. x. ch. 8, describes various ointments said to be "made and used for the transportation of witches and other miraculous effects". For aroint see Glossary.

rump-fed. The sense of this epithet is a moot point with commentators. The Clarendon Press editors explain it as "fed on the best joints, pampered". But Steevens and others give it the exactly opposite sense of 'offal-fed', asserting that rumps, like kidneys and other scraps, were kitchen perquisites. I prefer to either of these the more pointed explanation of Dyce's 2nd edition. He quotes from Kilian's Dictionary, "Rompe, nux myristica, vilior, cassa, inanis". The reference will then be to the chestnuts which the woman was eating.

7. the Tiger was a common name for a ship. Cf. Twelfth Night, v. 1. 65, of Antonio, "This is he that did the Tiger board". In Hakluyt's Voyages are records of a voyage made by Ralph Fitch and others in 1583. They went in the ship 'Tiger' of London to Tripolis, and thence by caravan to Aleppo.

8. a sieve. 'To sail in a sieve'—ἐπὶ ῥήτους πλεῖν—was a Greek phrase for performing the impossible. Witches were believed to have the power of going to sea in a sieve or an egg-shell. Cf. Scot (i. 4), and the Life of Dr. Fian, referred to in Appendix D.

9. a rat without a tail. Witches could transform themselves into the shape of brutes, but might be known by the absence of a tail. This peculiarity is familiar in werewolf stories. Just so the devil in human shape may be discovered by his cloven foot.

10. What the witch threatens to do is to gnaw a hole in the 'Tiger'.

11. a wind. Witches habitually sold winds to sailors. So Bartholomew Anglicus, in Mr. Steele's Medieval Love, of the Finlanders: "And so to men that sail by their coasts, and also to men that abide with them for default of wind, they proffer wind to sailing, and so they sell wind". For their power over the elements cf. also Scot (i. 4).

15. There is no difficulty in this line. The witch has power to make a wind blow to any port she will; for blow in the sense of 'blow upon', cf. Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3. 109, "Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow". Nothing is more common in Elizabethan grammar than the omission of a preposition after a verb, especially a verb of motion. See Abbott, §§ 198 sqq. But Pope would read points, and the Clarendon Press editors oris (= 'airts'). They quote

"Of all the airts the wind doth blow
I dearly lo'e the West".

17. the shipman's card. Either a 'chart', or the card upon which the points are marked in a compass.

20. pent-house lid, the eyelid, so called because its slope is like that of a penthouse or lean-to. The parallels quoted by commentators are irrelevant, because in them the penthouse is the eyebrow, not the eyelid.

21. forbid, under a curse, prayed against. The original sense of 'bid' is 'pray'.

23. The commonest charge laid against witches was that of causing their enemies to waste away. Generally this was done by making an image of wax and applying tortures to it. Cf. Scot (xii. 16). The belief in this is the basis of Rossetti's fine ballad of Sister Helen.

24. The power, within certain limits, of the witches to raise tempests is dwelt on in James I.'s Demonologie (1616), p. 117. Cf. also Scot, i. 4, and the Life of Dr. Fian.

31. The point of the first part of this scene is to set forth the malicious character of the witches, revelling in the thought of doing wanton evil.

32. weird sisters. The Ff. read weyward; but weird suits the trochaic metre, and is justified by Holinshed, who takes the phrase from Bellenden. Gavin Douglas also uses it to translate the Latin Parca. See Glossary, s.v. If weyward is retained it must be taken as only another spelling of weird, and not = 'wilful'. It is so used in Heywood's The Late Witches of Lancashire, "You look like one of the Scottish wayward sisters".

33. James I., Demonologie (16.6), p. 113, speaks of witches as "carried by the force of the spirit which is their conductor, either above the earth, or above the sea swiftly, to the place where they are to meet". Cf. also Scot, i. 4; ii. 14; iii. 1.

36. nine = 3×3 , has always been a mystical number.

38. Cf. i. i. 10. Macbeth's repetition of the witches' words shows at once the harmony between his temper and theirs. We may suppose him to refer primarily either to the varying chances of the day; or to the contrast between his success and the stormy weather which the witches have called up. So at least Banquo might take it, but our attention is called by the words to the mixed thoughts and qualities of Macbeth's heart.

39. Forres. The Ff. have Soris, but Holinshed fixes the right reading.

42. or does not introduce an alternative theory of the nature of the witches, but an alternative way of putting the same question, 'Are you human beings?'

46. beards. Witches were always supposed to be bearded; cf. Beaumont and Fletcher, Honest Man's Fortune, ii. 1—

"And the women that Come to us, for disguises must wear beards;
And that's, they say, a token of a witch".

48. Glamis. On the pronunciation of this word cf. Essay on Metre, § ix.

51. Macbeth starts because the last prophecy of the witches recalls his own guilty imaginings.

53. fantastical, i.e. imaginary; cf. line 139, and Richard II. i. 3. 299, "by thinking on fantastic summer's heat".

55, 56. present grace, noble having, and royal hope correspond to the three sentences of the prophecy.

58. The power of witches to see into the future is mentioned in Scot, i. 4. In the choice of his metaphor Shakespeare may have had in his mind certain accusations against them of transferring corn in the blade from one field to another and so forth.

Banquo, here and in lines 107, 125, is sceptical of the prophetic power of the witches, and he is content to let things take their course, assuming that if the fulfilment is to come at all, it will be by natural means. Being conscious of innocence, he has no reason to be perturbed like Macbeth.

67. Banquo and Fleance were mythical ancestors of the House of Stuart. Authentic history knows nothing of them. Here and in iv. 1. 100 sqq. Shakespeare is able to pay a delicate compliment to James I.

70. Macbeth has remained rapt for a while after the witches' greeting. He recovers himself now, and attempts to gather further information from them.

71. Sinel. The real name of Macbeth's father was Finleg. In Fordun's Scotochronicon (iv. 44) he appears as "Finele", and of this Boethius, and Holinshed following him, make "Synele".

73. A prosperous gentleman. Yet in i. 2. 52 Ross speaks of Cawdor as in league with the Norwegians. We can hardly suppose that Macbeth is unaware of this. A reference to the passages of Holinshed used by Shakespeare for this and the preceding scenes will show that in the history the disgrace of Cawdor followed after an interval the Norwegian invasion. In writing this speech Shakespeare may have forgotten that he had altered that point. Or, of course, the discrepancy may be due to some rehandling of the play for stage purposes. Cf. Introduction, p. 8.

83. The plain, honest soldier regards supernatural apparitions as devices of the devil (cf. line 123), better left undiscussed. This was a common belief among Elizabethan writers, and recurs in Hamlet, ii. 2. 627.

84. on is somewhat freely used by Shakespeare where we should write 'of'. Cf. Abbott, §§ 138, 180 sqq.

the insane root. It is difficult to say what plant Shakespeare had in his mind. It may have been hemlock, whereof Greene says, in his Never too Late (1616), "You have eaten of the roots of hemlock, that makes men's eyes conceit unseen objects"; and Ben Jonson, Sejanus—

"they lay that hold upon thy senses

As thou hast snuffed up hemlock".

Or it may have been henbane, of which Batman, Upon Bartholomew, De proprietatibus rerum, xviii. 87, says, "It is called insane, mad, for the use thereof is perilous, for if it be eate or dronke, it breedeth madness or slow lykness of sleepe. Therefore this herb is commonly called mirilidium, for it taketh away wit and reason". Or it may have been Holinshed's 'Mekilwort', which Boethius calls Solatrum amentiale, i.e. Deadly Nightshade, and of which Gerarde says, "It causeth sleep, troubleth the mind, bringeth madness, if a few of the berries be inwardly taken". In North's translation of Plutarch's Life of Antony, which Shakespeare was probably reading about the time he wrote Macbeth, is a story of how the Romans in the Parthian war ate roots, among them one "that killed them, and made them out of their wits".

For the causal use of insane, i.e. 'making insane', cf. v. 3. 43, "some sweet oblivious antidote". The transposition is common in Milton. Cf. Paradise Lost, ii. 73—

"if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benumb not still".

It occurs also in Chaucer, Knight's Tale, 529, of Mercury's caduceus, "His slepy yerde in hond he bar uprighte".

86. Macbeth already feels something of the jealousy of Banquo, which becomes an important motive later in the play.

91. personal venture; cf. i. 2. 16.

93. Which should be thine or his, i.e. whether he ought to give and thou receive wonder or praise.

97, 98. hail Came. This is Rowe's emendation for the tale Can of the Ff. The phrase 'thick as hail' is, of course, universal. Nearly all editors accept Came; some defend tale, and explain it 'as quick as one could 'tell' or 'count' them'.

103. The broken line with which the speech of Angus ends is characteristic of this play.

107. Banquo's aside emphasizes for the audience the partial fulfilment of the prophecy.

108. Cf. line 73, note. In the next speech Angus' ignorance of the nature of Cawdor's crime seems inconsistent with i. 2. 52, and still more with his knowledge of the thane's confession (line 114). And if Angus and Ross came straight from the king, when did this confession take place?

109. Who; for the omission of the antecedent cf. Abbott, § 251.

111. Abbott, § 461, attempts to scan Whether he was as one foot—'Whe'er h' was'. It is better to treat the redundant foot as due to the beginning of a new sentence in the line. Cf. Essay on Metre, § 5.

120. trusted home, i.e. trusted to the utmost; 'if you take this partial fulfilment as proof of the truth of the complete prophecy'. For the phrase cf. Lear, iii. 3. 13, "These injuries will be avenged home".

127. Note the absolute contrast between Banquo's sceptical and Macbeth's credulous reception of the same fact.

128. prologues ... act. Shakespeare's plays abound in theatrical metaphors and similes: it must be remembered that he was actor as well as playwright.

135. unfix my hair: a common sign of terror. Cf. Hamlet, iii.
4. 121—

“Your bedded hair, like life in excrements, Start up and stand an end”;

and i. 5. 18—

“[Make] Thy knotted and combined locks to part,
And each particular hair to stand an end,
Like quills upon the fretful porpentine”; and The Tempest, i. 2. 213, “With hair upstaring—then like reeds, not hair”.

137, 138. Present fears... imaginings. This is characteristic of Macbeth. He can always act bravely in a moment of danger, but cannot bear the strain of thinking on the future.

139. fantastical; cf. line 53, note.

These lines may be paraphrased: ‘The mere conception of this possible murder shakes that commonwealth which is my single self. Surmise of the future smothers the function or action of my senses, and only what is to be, not what is, appears real and vivid to me’.

140. single. Johnson explains this as contrasted with the larger commonwealth of many persons. The comparison of the individual to the state is now a truism. Others, however, interpret single as ‘weak’, and quote i. 6. 16, and 2 Henry IV. i. 2. 207, “Is not your wit single?”

Staunton quotes a parallel to this passage from Julius Caesar, ii. 1. 63—

“Between the acting of a dreadful thing
And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream:
The Genius and the mortal instruments
Are then in council; and the state of man,
Like to a little kingdom, suffers then
The nature of an insurrection”.

143. For the present Macbeth finds a relief in deferring the struggle with temptation, and putting the accomplishment of his ambitions in the hands of chance.

147. It is a fatalistic sentiment in compressed phrase, which can only be explained by expansion: ‘The roughest day comes to an end, the fated hour must strike, time sets all straight’. Cf. Hawes—

“For though the day be never so long,
At last the bell ringeth to evensong”; and Hacket, Life of Abp. Williams, “Time and long day mitigate sad accidents”.

runs. “Time and the hour” are practically one idea, but Shakespeare’s syntax admits of a singular verb with two subjects: cf. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 336.

150. Macbeth can play a part when necessary, and does so now. He has sufficiently made up his mind to wish not to incur suspicion.

151. I.e. in my memory.

152. The last four lines of Macbeth's speech are to Banquo alone.

154. The interim having weigh'd it. This is another of the compressed phrases which crowd this play: the sense is obvious enough.

The three first scenes of this act may be regarded as taking place on the same day. An interval of one night follows, allowing time for Cawdor's execution, and for the despatch of the letter to Lady Macbeth, which she is discovered reading in sc. 5.

Scene 4.

The important point in the scene is the nomination of Malcolm as Duncan's successor. This takes away the hope that chance will crown Macbeth. He is at last brought fully face to face with the fact that if his ambition is to be satisfied, it must needs be by foul means.

The sudden resolution of the king to claim the hospitality of Inverness is the first of a series of lucky accidents, which show that for the present the gods are on Macbeth's side. Cf. Introduction, pp. 25, 26.

The kingly character of Duncan, his simple gratitude and absolute trust, are a foil to the black treachery of his subject.

2. Those in commission. The task was committed to Ross in i. 2. 64, but it must have been executed by deputy.

4. If the play has been rearranged it may be that this mention of Cawdor's confession originally preceded that in i. 3. 115.

7. Steevens suggested that this fine description of Cawdor's death was inspired by that of the Earl of Essex, the friend of Shakespeare's patron Lord Southampton, which took place under similar circumstances. Singer quotes Montaigne, "with whom Shakespeare was familiar". He writes, "In my time, three of the most execrable persons I ever knew in all abominations of life, and the most infamous, have been seen to die very orderly and quietly, and in every circumstance composed even into perfection". Cf. also Marvell's famous lines on the death of Charles I. (Horatian Ode, stanza 15), beginning—

"He nothing common did or mean
Upon that memorable scene".

11. Throughout this play Shakespeare makes a splendid use of what is known as 'tragic irony', which consists in putting into the mouth of a speaker double-edged phrases, of which the hidden meaning is only apparent to the spectators. In the present instance

Duncan does not know, but the audience do, that his condemnation of Cawdor is just as applicable to Macbeth. And the force of this is heightened by the friendly greeting, "Oh worthiest cousin". Cf. line 14.

11. careless, in the sense of 'that of which no care is taken'; cf. the use of 'sightless' for 'invisible' in i. 5. 50 and i. 7. 23; and Abbott, Sz. Gr. § 3.

There's no art.... The Clarendon Press editors quote Euripides, Medea, 518—ἀνδρῶν δ', ὅτ' ἡ χρὴ τὸν κακὸν διειδέναι οὐδεὶς χαρακτὴρ ἐμπέφυκε σώματι;

('[Why is it that] there is no sign upon the frame of man, whereby one may know the bad?')

Malone contrasts Sonnet xciii—

"In many's looks the false heart's history Is writ".

20. Might have been mine, i.e. that the recompense I give thee might have been more instead of less than thy deserts.

27. Safe toward, i.e. without running any risk of failing in the love and honour they bear towards you.

30. nor. Double negatives are common in Elizabethan English; cf. Abbott, Sz. Gr. § 406.

35. drops of sorrow. Malone quotes Winter's Tale, v. 2. 50, "Their joy waded in tears"; and Much Ado, i. 1. 22, "Joy could not show itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness".

The missing half-foot may be naturally supplied by a pause.

42. Duncan's last words are addressed to Macbeth only.

45. Another touch of irony. Duncan does not know what will be the nature of Lady Macbeth's joy.

52. wink at, i.e. shut itself to, pretend not to observe.

58. The scene ends on the ironic note.

This scene may be supposed to take place on the morning of the second day. There is no interval in the breathless speed of the action until the end of act ii. scene 3. In the afternoon Macbeth, and in the evening Duncan, reach Inverness.

Scene 5.

This scene shows us for the first time that Macbeth's destiny is complicated by his relations to another character. By himself he might not have had the courage to yield to temptation; but Lady Macbeth's influence comes in to confirm him in the path of sin. She is strong just where he is weak, in self-conquest, in singleness of will and tenacity of purpose. Superstition and the strain of expectation will make him swerve from his course, but they have no power over her. She is the nobler character of the two; her ambition is for him, not for herself; it is for him that she divests herself of conscience and, so far as may be, even of womanhood.

2. The profound impression made upon Macbeth's superstitious and guilty mind by the witches is shown by the immediate inquiry which he made as to their supernatural powers of knowledge. This can only have taken place during the brief interval between scenes 3 and 4; and it must have been at the same period that he sent the letter to his wife.

6. rapt; cf. i. 3. 57, 142.

18. the milk of human-kindness. There is no hyphen in the Ff. If kindness means 'kindliness' this seems a singularly mistaken estimate of Macbeth's character; nor is Lady Macbeth the woman so to misread him. Mr. Moulton, in his Shakespeare as a Dramatic Artist (vii. 149), suggests another interpretation. He would take human-kindness in the sense of 'human-nature' and milk as suggesting not 'absence of hardness' but "natural, inherited, traditional feelings, imbibed at the mother's breast". He adds, "The whole expression of Lady Macbeth, then, I take to attribute to her husband an instinctive tendency to shrink from whatever is in any way unnatural". Perhaps for 'unnatural' one should rather read 'abnormal', 'unconventional'. 'Kind' can of course bear the sense given to it by Mr. Moulton, but there are several closely parallel passages, in which 'milk' certainly connotes 'absence of hardness'. Thus, in iv. 3. 98, "pour the sweet milk of concord into hell"; in Romeo and Juliet, iii. 3. 55, "Adversity's sweet milk, philosophy"; and in Lear, i. 4. 364, "This milky gentleness".

21. illness. The word is generally explained as 'wickedness', but I am inclined to think it is rather 'discontent', 'nervous irritability', 'unwillingness to follow the common herd, and refrain from realizing ambition'. It is a quality directly opposed to 'human-kindness' in Mr. Moulton's sense of 'commonplaceness'.

24. The Ff. have no inverted commas. Pope and others include within them "Thus...undone"; but most modern editors end the quotation at "have it". That is the murder of Duncan; it, the crown. Perhaps we ought to read thou'ldst have, as Delius suggests.

29. the golden round, i.e. the crown. Cf. iv. i. 88, and Richard II. iii. 2. 160—

"the hollow crown,
That rounds the mortal temples of a king".

Abraham Fraunce uses the phrase for a ring in The Countess of Pembroke's Ioy Church, pt. ii. (1591)—

"Wedding ring, farewell...
...full well did I cause to be graven
In thy golden round these words".

30. metaphysical, i.e. supernatural. See Glossary.

doth seem to have thee crowned. Lady Macbeth speaks as if Macbeth was already crowned in the eyes of fate. Critics have doubted if the words can bear this meaning, and have proposed various emendations for doth seem; such as doth seek, doth deem, doth ween, doth mean, design.

32. Hunter points out that the last two lines of Lady Macbeth's speech are to cover the sudden exclamation and start of surprise, which might have betrayed her. The announcement of the king's visit breaking in upon her dark soliloquy is highly dramatic.

34. inform'd, i.e. given information. For the absolute use of the verb cf. ii. i. 48.

36. had the speed of him, i.e. outstripped him.

39. great news. Another two-edged saying; cf. i. 4. 45.

40. Even the raven, always of ill omen, grows hoarse to croak the unrivalled tragedy that is preparing. It is absurd to say that Lady Macbeth 'calls the messenger a raven', but no doubt her pregnant metaphor is suggested by his lack of breath.

41. spirits. Lady Macbeth is accustomed to inward communings. She dramatizes them, representing her warring motives as spirits that influence her this way and that.

42. mortal thoughts, i.e. thoughts that bring about death; cf. iii. 4. 81; iv. 3. 3.

45. remorse, in the wider sense, which includes repentance before the actual commission of sin.

47, 48. keep peace between The effect and it: another phrase which it is not easy to analyse precisely. I think it means, 'keep peace (i.e. avert murder) by interposing between purpose and effect' Hudson suggests break peace, and Bailey keep space (i.e. delay).

50. sightless, i.e. invisible: cf. i. 7. 23, and i. 4. 11, note.

Lady Macbeth's vivid psychology has led her to a refined form of the same conception of evil powers outside the will and acting upon it, which finds a cruder expression in the belief in witches.

54. the blanket of the dark. A perusal of the notes to this fine metaphor, quoted in Furness' Variorum edition of the play, will give the student a fair idea of the ineptitude to which Shakespearian criticism has at times fallen.

Ingleby quotes a good parallel from Carlyle's Sartor Resartus, where the night is described as "that hideous coverlet of vapours".

55. Lady Macbeth does not greet her husband with the common-places of affection. One subject is absorbing them both, and of that alone can they fitly speak.

The horror of the play begins to grow, created with subtle art, by the half-spoken thoughts (line 61), the euphemisms (line 68), the significant pauses (line 62).

59. instant, i.e. the present. The transition from this sense to that of a brief moment of time is well shown in ii. 3. 97—

“from this instant
There’s nothing serious in mortality”.

62. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 511, suggests that the pause in this line is intentional. Lady Macbeth waits to see the effect of her words.

63. Cf. i. 2. 47, note.

64. the time, i.e., according to Delius, “the age we live in”. Cf. i. 7. 81. So the whole phrase will mean, ‘to deceive men you must put on a face in keeping with their temper’. Steevens quotes Daniel, Civil Wars, bk. viii.—

“He draws a traverse ’twixt his grievances,
Looks like the time: his eye made not report”.

67. The ‘snake in the grass’ was a favourite symbol of flattery with the writers of emblem-books. See, e.g., Whitney’s Choice of Emblems, p. 27. Shakespeare often uses it. Cf. Richard II. iii. 2. 19, and Romeo and Juliet, iii. 2. 73, “Oh serpent heart, hid with a flowering face”.

68. provided for. Note the unwillingness to use an ugly word for an ugly thing; and cf. in Merry Wives, i. 3. 32, Pistol’s “‘Convey’, the wise it call. ‘Steal!’ foh, a fico for the phrase”.

72. Macbeth is still irresolute.

Scene 6.

The visit of Duncan to Macbeth’s castle is one of the three accidents or opportunities which help Macbeth to attain the object of his ambition. By such hidden means work the supernatural forces, in whose hands man is a puppet. Cf. Introduction, pp. 16, 22. In this scene the trustful, gentle nature of Duncan is used to emphasize by contrast the horror of the coming murder. The touches of natural description serve a similar purpose.

3. gentle. Strictly speaking, it is ‘the air’, not ‘our senses’, that is gentle. Shakespeare often transfers epithets thus from the noun to which they are really appropriate to some other closely connected with it.

4. martlet. This is Rowe’s emendation for the barlet of the Ff.

5. mansionry. The Ff. have mansonry. The emendation in the text is Theobald’s. Pope preferred masonry.

6. The line is a foot short as it stands.

9. most. So Rowe for the must of the Ff.

11. Duncan courteously apologizes for rewarding Macbeth's past services by imposing a new one upon him. His affection, he says, only brings trouble on his subjects; yet they must thank God for that trouble, because it is due to affection.

16. single. Cf. i. 3. 140, note.

20. hermits, i.e. we shall ever pray for you, like hermits or bedesmen.

Macbeth is too little master of himself to meet Duncan. He leaves that to the stronger nerves of his wife.

30. These phrases of courtesy often require the action of the stage to illustrate them. We may suppose Duncan at this point to conduct his hostess into the castle.

Scene 7.

Macbeth is not yet resolved. His vivid imagination paints terribly the dangers in his path. Thus oppressed, he leaves the banquet to be alone. It is not moral scruples that torment him, nor even a dread of what lies beyond the grave. It is the thought of the earthly hereafter, the consciousness that ill deeds recoil upon the doer. To him comes Lady Macbeth; in the inevitable clash of the two natures hers proves the stronger; her dauntless will confirms his; her insight into his character enables her to meet him with the most effective arguments. He no longer hesitates, and re-echoes for himself her previous counsel of dissimulation. Here the act naturally closes; the Temptation is complete.

1. There is a subtle double sense of done. The idea is, 'If all were over when the actual deed of murder is done, then there would be no reason in delay'. Mr. Grant White would put a full stop at well; and a comma at quickly. In that case the third done would bear the same sense as the first.

4. his. By far the simplest sense is given by taking his to mean 'Duncan's'.

5. the be-all, i.e. a thing complete in itself, not complicated with consequences.

6. bank and shoal, i.e. the shallows of life as contrasted with the depths of eternity. But shoal is only Theobald's emendation for the school of the Ff. If the Ff. reading is kept, bank must be interpreted as 'bench', and the whole phrase taken as introducing the metaphor of lines 8-10.

7. Macbeth would take his chance in eternity, were he sure of trammelling up the temporal results of his act.

jump. Cf. Cymbeline, v. 1. 188, "jump the after enquiry on your own peril".

8. here, i.e. on earth.

16. The considerations which might have made Macbeth shrink from the murder, only lead him to quail at the danger of incurring popular hatred.

22. Cf. Psalm xviii. 10—

“And he rode upon a cherub, and did fly;
Yea, he did fly upon the wings of the wind”.

23. sightless, cf. i. 5. 50. The couriers of the air are of course the winds.

25, 26. There are really two metaphors in these lines, both from horsemanship; that of the spurless rider, and that of the rider not yet mounted, who tries in vain to reach his saddle by vaulting.

The spur wanting to Macbeth is the “illness should attend” ambition, the lack of which in him his wife discerned in i. 5. 20.

28. the other, i.e. the other side. Some critics would put side in the text. It is not necessary. The pause fills up the syllable; and the sense is supplied from “the sides of my intent”.

31. Macbeth does not confess to his wife the fears that fill his mind; but her own insight into him is sufficient to show her the real causes of his hesitation.

35. Cf. King John, iv. 2. 116—

“O, where hath our intelligence been drunk?
Where hath it slept?”

37. green. Cf. Carlyle’s famous description of Robespierre (French Revolution, iv. 4), “complexion of a multiplex atrabiliar colour, the final shade of which may be the pale sea-green”.

39. Such, i.e. “green and pale”.

42. the ornament of life, i.e. “the golden opinions” of line 33.

45. the adage. It is found in Heywood’s Proverbs (1566), “The cate would eat fish, and would not wet her feete”.

47. beast. The point is, ‘If it is not the act of a man to do the deed now, was it one to suggest it before’. This passage is sufficient to prove that the conception of the murder was Macbeth’s, not his wife’s. Line 51 shows that the reference can hardly be to scene 5. The matter must have been discussed between them at a point before the action of the play.

50. I.e. ‘You were willing to play the man enough to become a king instead of a subject’.

59. Mrs. Jameson says on this line, “Mrs. Siddons adopted successively three different intonations in giving the words ‘We fail’. At first as a quick contemptuous interrogation. Afterwards with the note of admiration, and an accent of indignant astonishment, laying the emphasis on ‘we’. Lastly, she fixed on what I am convinced is the true reading—we fail, with the simple period, modulating her voice to a deep, low, resolute tone, which settled the issue at once—as though she had said ‘If we fail, why then we fail, and all is over’. This is consistent with the dark fatalism of the character, and the sense of the line following—and the effect was sublime, almost awful.”

I prefer Mrs. Siddons’ second interpretation. It is not to Lady Macbeth’s purpose to admit the possibility of failure. Fatalism would not gain her point.

60. But, i.e. only.

Steevens suggested that the metaphor of this line was taken from the screwing up of musical instruments to the right pitch.

72. The suggestion of a definite scheme appeals to Macbeth’s practical mind. He is in his element now, the element of action.

77. other, in an adverbial sense, ‘otherwise’.

78. As, seeing that.

81. Cf. i. 5. 63.

Act II. Scene I.

This introductory scene falls into three divisions. In lines 1–10 the mood of the spectator is prepared for the crime to be done. It is past midnight, black as Macbeth’s heart; evil influences are abroad, disquieting even the innocent Banquo.

3. In ii. 3. 22 the Porter says, “Faith, sir, we were carousing till the second cock”, i.e. about two o’clock; cf. also v. i. 39.

4. husbandry, economy. For the metaphor, “heaven’s candles”, cf. Merchant of Venice, v. i. 220, “by these blessed candles of the night”; Romeo and Juliet, iii. 5. 9, “Night’s candles are burnt out”, &c.

5. that, his helmet, perhaps, or a dagger. On the stage the action would explain, and all Shakespeare’s plays were written primarily for the stage.

11–30. Duncan’s trust and graciousness doubles the guilt of the murder. Lady Macbeth’s influence has prevailed; Macbeth’s mind is made up. He plays a part with Banquo, professes to “think not of” the witches; yet delicately sounds his friend (line 25), angling for his support hereafter. Banquo’s reply shows that already his suspicions are not unawakened.

14. offices. Some critics would read officers; but I think this is a case of the use of abstract for concrete.

16. shut up, wrapped in; the use of the participle without ‘is’ is characteristic of the compressed style of the play.

19. Which. The antecedent is will.

23. We, you and I. Macbeth is too good an actor to use the kingly 'we', as the Clarendon Press editors suggest.

25. Macbeth's words are purposely obscure; 'If you will consent to my wishes, when the occasion arises', i.e. 'If you will support me on the throne'.

31-64. Macbeth is now at bottom resolute, but his nerve will not bear the strain of suspense: he becomes at once a prey to horrible visions. Yet he has, now as always, a gift of aloofness, which enables him by fits and starts to analyse his own circumstances and mental state. He can philosophize verbally, but only so.

41. The line is filled up by a pause, during which Macbeth draws his dagger.

44. Either his eyes, which see the dagger, must be deceived, or his touch, which only meets emptiness. I think the dagger should not be in the air, but on a table; he thinks it real at first; is uncertain when he fails to clutch it; and convinced that it is a vision by the "gouts of blood".

48. informs, takes visible form.

51. The omitted syllable is but awkwardly replaced by a pause; Davenant's version has now witchcraft celebrates; Steevens would read sleepers.

52. Hecate's offerings, the offerings made to Hecate. Hecate, in classical mythology the name of Artemis-Diana, in her aspect as an infernal deity, was regarded in the middle ages as the queen of witches. As such she appears in Middleton and elsewhere, as well as in Hamlet, iii. 2. 269; Lear, i. 1. 112. In Shakespeare's undoubted plays the word is always a dissyllable.

55. Tarquin's ravishing strides. So Pope for the sides of Ff. The phrase has needlessly exercised commentators; but strides may well be 'stealthy'. Cf. Lucrece, 365, "Into her chamber wickedly he stalks". In Cymbeline, ii. 2. 12, Iachimo, like Macbeth, compares himself to Tarquin, as he sets about his crime, "Our Tarquin thus did softly press the rushes".

The epithet ravishing is transferred from Tarquin to strides.

57. which way they walk, is explanatory of "steps". Cf. Lear, i. 1. 272, "I know you what you are"; and Abbott, Sz. Gr. § 414.

58. A reminiscence of S. Luke, xix. 40.

59. 'And prevent the deed of horror from being done at this suitable time.'

61. gives. For the singular verb with a plural subject cf. i. 3. 147, note.

Scene 2.

There is no real need for a change of scene. The action is continuous to the end of scene 3.

The spiritual weakness of Macbeth, the complete unstringing of every fibre, once the deed is done; and, on the other hand, the triumphant self-control of Lady Macbeth, are both at their height in this scene. The murder is not presented, only felt, on the stage. Here again Shakespeare approaches the classical spirit. One thinks of the death of Agamemnon and of Horace's "Nec pueros coram populo Medea trucidet".

1. Lady Macbeth has deliberately wound herself up to the necessary pitch by the use of wine.

2-5. These four lines, as printed in the Ff, do not scan. The very simple re-arrangement is due to Rowe.

3. The owl has always been a bird of ill omen since Christianity swept away the worship of Athene, and even before in Rome.

the fatal bellman. The Clarendon Press editors quote Webster, Duchess of Malfi, iv. 2—

"I am the common bellman,
That usually is sent to condemned persons,
The night before they suffer".

4. stern'st. Staunton proposed etern'st.

He, Macbeth.

9. Enter Macbeth is the stage-direction of the Ff. Most modern editors read Macb. (within). Probably the court-yard had a gallery round it, and into this Macbeth rushes in alarm at a fancied sound. He has already done the murder, and is on his way down. Cf. lines 14-17.

11. The point is, 'to attempt and fail is ruin'. The Ff. punctuate the attempt, and not the deed, giving a wrong sense.

13, 14. Such touches must not be neglected in studying the character of Lady Macbeth. Her remorseless words and deeds do not come from a callous nature, but from a steeled will.

16. The arrangement of the lines is Hunter's, except that he reads Ay for 'I'. The Ff. have—

"Lady. I heard the owl scream and the crickets cry.

Did not you speak?

Macb. When?

Lady. Now.

Macb. As I descended?

Lady. I."

19. Hark! Macbeth is startled again by an imaginary noise. On the modern stage a clap of thunder vulgarizes the point.

26. two: doubtless Malcolm and Donalbain. The picture of the sons, half waking while their father is murdered, adds to the horror of the situation.

33. Lady Macbeth tries to quell her husband's excited imagination by the exercise of common-sense. The thought of sleep leads his over-wrought brain to pile up metaphors upon it.

36-40. These lines are an echo of the numerous sonnets in which the followers of Sidney and Daniel tasked their wits in fanciful changes on the idea of "Care-charmer Sleep".

37. sleeve. Ff. have sleeve; but see Glossary, s.v.

42. Macbeth, in his frenzy, lingers on the titles whose fascination have lured him to sin.

55. Cf. Webster, Vittoria Corombona, "Terrify babes, my lord, with painted devils".

56. Lady Macbeth's grim pun gives a new touch of horror. Cf. Henry IV. iv. 5. 129, "England shall double gild his treble guilt"; and Henry V. ii. chor. 26, "the gilt of France,—O guilt indeed".

57. The knocking here seems to show that the opening of the next scene always formed part of the play. Macbeth is not sure at first if it is real or 'fantastic'.

60. Cf. v. i. 26, &c., and the quotation from Forman's MS. in Appendix A. Cf. Sophocles, Oedipus Tyrannus, 1227—

οἶμαι γὰρ οὐτ' ἂν Ἴστρον οὐτε Φᾶσω ἂν νίψαι καθαρίῳ τήνδε τὴν στέγην.

('Methinks not Danube's self nor Phasis could cleanse these halls with purification');

and Seneca, Phædra, ii. 723—

"Quis eluet me Tanais? aut quae barbaris
Maeotis undis Pontico incumbens mari?
Non ipse toto magnus Oceano pater
Tantum expiarit sceleris";

and Marston, The Insatiate Countess—

"Although the waves of all the northern sea
Should flow for ever through these guilty hands,
Yet the sanguinolent stain would extant be".

63. 'Turning the green waves into a sheet of red.' The Ff. spoil the sense by punctuating, making the green one, red. Cf. Hamlet, ii. 2. 479, "Now is he total gules"; and Shakespeare and Fletcher, Two Noble Kinsmen—

"Thou mighty one, that with thy power has turned Green Neptune into purple";

and Munday, Downfall of Robert, Earl of Huntingdon, "He made the green sea red with Turkish blood", and "The multitudes of seas dyed red with blood".

68. 'Your firmness hath deserted you.'

Scene 3.

The episode of the porter is necessary for two reasons; mechanically, to give Macbeth and Lady Macbeth time to prepare for the approaching discovery; dramatically, to afford an interval of relief between two scenes of intensely strained emotion. See Introduction, p. 24, and Appendix F. The change of emotional level is marked by the use of prose. But it is grim fooling, in the shadow of murder.

The entry of the lords makes Macbeth himself again, for there is something to be done. He acts consummately, touching just the right notes; the grief of the loving subject, the anger of the generous host. Banquo and Duncan's two sons alone see through the deception. On the other hand, Lady Macbeth's turn to give way comes in the very crisis of action. Her fainting is not dissimulation; her nerves will bear no more.

The gods are still fighting on Macbeth's side. His happy impulse to kill the grooms, and the ill-considered flight of Malcolm and Donalbain, both help to save him from suspicion.

2. hell-gate. "He never dreams, while imagining himself a porter of hell-gate, how near he comes to the truth." (Bodenstedt.)

old, a frequent 'strengthening' epithet, much like 'bloody', as vulgarly used. Cf. Merchant of Venice, iv. 2. 15, "We shall have old swearing"; Much Ado, v. 2. 98, "Yonder's old coil at home". Dyce notes a similar use of vecchio in Italian.

5. Malone quotes Hall, Satires, iv. 6—

"Each muck-worm will be rich with lawless gain,
Although he smother up mowes of seven years' grain,
And hanged himself when corn goes cheap again".

He attempts also to date the play by this and other allusions. The price of corn in the summer and autumn of 1606 was lower than for several years before and after.

6. napkins, pocket-handkerchiefs. In As You Like It, iv. 3, the "napkin" brought by Oliver to Rosalind is also called a "handkercher".

9. the other devil's name. Is this 'the name of Demogorgon', which might not be uttered?

an equivocator: probably an allusion to the doctrine of 'equivocation'—Newman's "economy" of truth—taught by the Jesuits; and perhaps in especial to the trial, in March, 1606, of Garnet, Superior of the order in England.

15. "The joke consists in this, that a French hose being very short and straight, a tailor must be master of his trade who could steal anything from thence." (Warburton.) The Clarendon Press editors quote Stubbes, Anatomie of Abuses, where two kinds of French hose are described, one loose, one very tight. Malone, still trying to fix the date, quotes a parallel from Anthony Nixon's Black Year (1606).

21. the primrose way: cf. Hamlet, i. 3. 50, "the primrose path of dalliance"; and All's Well, iv. 5. 56, "the flowery way, that leads to the broad gate and the great fire". Also R. L. Stevenson, Underwoods, i. xi.—

"Life is over, life was gay;
We have come the primrose way".

27. the second cock; about two in the morning; cf. v. i. 39. But if the murder was so early, how can it now be already "so late", and time for Macduff to visit Duncan? Holinshed puts the murder of King Duffe near daybreak, "a little before cocks crow".

56. limited, appointed; cf. Richard III. v. 3. 25, "limit each leader to his several charge".

58-66. All nature is perturbed by the tragedy of the night. On Shakespeare's use of the 'pathetic fallacy', see Introduction, p. 25.

63. combustion, tumult (Cotgrave's Dictionary). So used in Henry VIII. v. 4. 51, and Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 225.

64. the obscure bird, the owl, which delights in darkness. Cf. ii. 2. 3, 15.

69. Double negatives, for emphasis, are common in Shakespeare. See Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 406.

73. Note the confusion of metaphors in anointed temple.

77. The sight of the Gorgons, Medusa and her sisters, turned men to stone. Shakespeare alludes again to them in Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 5. 116. He may have read of them in Ovid, Metamorphoses, v. 189.

81. sleep, death's counterfeit. So Midsummer Night's Dream, iii. 2. 64, "death-counterfeiting sleep", and Lucrece, 402, "(sleep), the map of death".

83. The great doom's image. Cf. Lear, v. 3. 264, "Is this the promised end—or image of that horror?"

97. instant: cf. i. 5. 59, note.

101. this vault. Life is compared to an empty cellar, from which all the wine has been drawn. For the metaphor cf. the phrase in Tennyson's Ulysses, "I have drunk Life to the lees".

117. pauser, that which makes to pause. “-er is sometimes appended to a noun for the purpose of signifying an agent.” (Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 443.)

118. laced, covered with little wavy patterns. Critics have objected, some to the far-fetched metaphor, some to the dwelling upon horrors in this speech. Johnson thought that it was designed “to show the difference between the studied language of hypocrisy and the natural outcries of sudden passion”.

golden, a common Elizabethan colour-epithet of blood. Presumably the colour of blood has not changed much, so their gold must have been redder in tint than ours. See the puns in ii. 2. 56, note.

122. breech'd, covered as with breeches. The queer metaphor is no doubt suggested by the phrase “naked daggers”. Johnson suggested Unmanly drenched.

127. argument, subject for discussion.

128. an auger-hole. Critics interpret this, ‘an obscure or minute hole’; but surely it means a hole made with a sharp point, as of an auger—or a dagger. Cf. line 123. Donalbain naturally fears his father’s fate for himself and his brother.

130. brew’d. The phrase suggests deliberate manufacture. Macbeth’s hypocrisy is quite apparent to the two princes.

131. ‘As yet we can only feel grief; we have not reached the point where attempt at revenge can be set on foot.’

137. pretence, aim, intention, design. Cf. ii. 4. 119. Banquo’s suspicions of Macbeth are renewed; he sees that this is no mere murder by grooms; it is the outcome of some treasonous secret plot.

141. them. The princes regard Banquo and Macduff as being, very possibly, as false as Macbeth. Cf. the interview between Malcolm and Macduff in act iv. scene 3.

143. easy. Elizabethan syntax uses many adjectives as adverbs. See Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 1.

146. Macbeth was Duncan’s cousin, according to Holinshed.

150. Cf. iii. 4. 119.

151. warrant, justification.

The action has been almost continuous since act i. scene 4, covering a single day and night. The next scene takes place late on the day after the murder.

Scene 4.

Macbeth’s first crime has been successful; his acting and the flight of the princes have saved him from detection. As Duncan’s cousin and a great captain he succeeds naturally to the vacant throne. If Macduff or Banquo have their suspicions, the time to publish them is not yet. This scene gives relief and perspective to the action, by presenting it from an outside point of view, that of the Scottish subject.

4. trifled, turned to trifles. Cf. Merchant of Venice, iv. i. 298, "We trifle time". Elizabethan writers use almost any noun or adjective as a verb, at pleasure. See Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 290.

7. the travelling lamp, the sun; the epithet is applied to him by both Drayton and Cowley. F 1, F 2 read travailing; F 2, F 3, travelling; but the spelling of the two words was hardly discriminated in the 17th century.

9, 10. The rare occurrence of eclipses has made them objects of superstitious dread in many nations.

12. towering, a technical term of falconry. Cf. Donne, Letter to Sir H. Goodyere—

"Which when herself she lessens in the air,
You then first say, that high enough she towers".

13. Both the "mousing owl" and the rebellious horses symbolize the disloyalty of Macbeth to his king. In the weird atmosphere of this play supernatural signs and omens do not appear out of place.

15. minions, those most highly prized. See Glossary, s.v.

21. Macduff is in a mood of universal suspicion. He will not confide in Ross, a mere facile courtier; but answers him ambiguously. Yet he will by no means stay at the new king's court.

24. pretend; cf. ii. 3. 113.

27. still. Ross reverts to the thought of the unnatural marvels just recounted.

29. Note the octosyllable line, and cf. Essay on Metre, § 5 (ii).

31. Scone, a city, now ruined, two miles north of Perth. It was the capital of the Pictish kings, and the coronation place of the kings of Scotland. The famous stone, on which the rite was performed, has been, since 1296, in Westminster Abbey.

33. Colmekill, the 'kill' or 'cell' of St. Columba, or Colim M'Felim M'Fergus, the converter of Scotland. It is the same as Iona, one of the Western Isles, and was the usual burying-place of the kings of Scotland.

36. thither, i.e. to Scone.

40, 41. The old man rightly judges Ross as a mere time-server.

An interval of some weeks follows this scene. In the next, Macbeth is firmly established on the throne, and has had time to hear that Malcolm and Donalbain are in England and Ireland respectively.

Act III. Scene I.

The First Crime is hardly over before it leads to the Second. Macbeth cannot feel secure while Banquo lives; his Genius is rebuked under him; no show of honours can win his affection; he remains courteous, cold and silent. Nor can Macbeth forget that word in the prophecy of the weird sisters about the succession of Banquo's house to the throne.

1. Banquo's speech leaves no doubt on his view of Macbeth; it shows too, that in his mind, as in the king's, the promise of the witches is unforgotten.

7. shine, prove conspicuously true.

13. all-thing, as a variant for altogether, does not occur elsewhere in Shakespeare.

16. Command upon is an unusual phrase for 'lay your command upon'; but there is no need to read, "Set your highness' command upon me" (Mason), or "Let your highness' command be upon me" (Keightley).

the which, is common in Shakespeare: cf. the French lequel, and Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 270.

26. supper, i.e. seven o'clock; cf. line 41.

the better, because he had to go far. Cf. Stowe, Survey of London (1618), p. 145, of tilting at the quintain, "He that hit it full, if he rid not the faster, (because he had hit it) had a sound blow in his neck, with a bag full of sand hanged on the other end".

43. the sweeter = an adverb, 'more sweetly'; cf. ii. 3. 143.

44. while is used for 'until', where the action extends continuously over the intervening time. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 137.

The formula God be with you may be scanned as a dissyllable—our 'Good-bye'.

48. thus, on the throne.

52. to, in addition to. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 185.

56, 57. This passage is explained by Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 3. 18—

"Therefore, O Antony, stay not by his side;
Thy demon, that's thy spirit which keeps thee, is Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable,
Where Cæsar's is not; but near him, thy angel Becomes a fear, as being o'er-powered".

Shakespeare borrowed the idea from North's Plutarch (Life of Antony (1631), p. 926).

56. Genius, in the Elizabethan sense, is a tutelar spirit; but perhaps we find it here in a stage of transition to the modern use.

Macbeth means that what we should call his 'temperament', his 'personality', quails before that of Banquo.

64. There is no son of Macbeth in the play; but cf. iv. 3. 216, note, and Introduction, p. 14.

65. filed, i.e. defiled. The Elizabethans constantly drop such affixes. Cf. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 460.

68. mine eternal jewel, i.e. mine immortal soul. Cf. Richard II. i. 1. 180—

"A jewel in a ten-times-barr'd-up chest
Is a bold spirit in a loyal breast".

72. champion; not 'fight for me', but 'fight against me'. There is no other instance of such a use of the verb.

to the utterance; the French à l'outrance. See Glossary, s.v.

The murderers are former victims of Macbeth's own, whom he has now induced to believe that they owe their wrongs to Banquo. Here again Macbeth's histrionic skill, his power of playing upon the emotions of others, comes out. This passage is sufficient to show that Macbeth was not perfectly innocent and noble before the witches tempted him.

80. pass'd in probation, proved, passing them one by one.

81. borne in hand, handled, treated. Cf. Hamlet, ii. 2. 65—

"grieved
That so his sickness, age and impotence
Was falsely borne in hand".

88. gospel'd, filled with the spirit of gospel teaching. See S. Matthew, v. 4, on forgiveness of injuries.

91. yours, your family.

95. the valued file, the list or scale of values. So Donne has "the plaguey bill" for 'the bill of the plague'. Singer states that such a catalogue of dogs occurs in Fleming's Junius' Nomenclator.

97. housekeeper, watch-dog, so called in Topsell's History of Beasts (1658).

100. Particular addition, a particular epithet or qualification.

103. Scan—"Nót in | the wórst | ránk of | mánhood | sáy it".

104, 105. 'I will suggest to you a means for getting rid of your enemy, and making a friend of one, to whom also he is dangerous.'

112. tugg'd with. 'With' is often used for 'by'. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 193.

116. in such bloody distance, standing near enough to draw blood.

118. my near'st of life, the nearest parts to my life, the most vital parts. Cf. v. 2. 11.

121. For, on account of.

122. loves. We should say 'love'; but cf. v. 8. 61, and iii. 2. 53, "preys".

123. Who, for 'whom'. Cf. iii. 4. 42, and Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 274.

130. Johnson proposes a perfect spy o' the time, and makes the line a reference to the third murderer of scene 3. But I think it only means 'acquaint you with the knowledge, or espial, of the perfect time to act'. For the transference of the epithet cf. ii. i. 55.

132. something from, at some distance from.

'Keep in mind that I must remain absolutely clear from suspicion.'
For the absolute use of the participle cf. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 378.

Scene 2.

From the moment of her sin, remorse begins to lay hold upon Lady Macbeth. She conceals it in Macbeth's presence, thinking to strengthen him, as of old; but the two lives are insensibly drifting asunder. Macbeth addresses her in terms of grim love, but he no longer takes her counsel on his schemes, and only half imparts them to her, even at the last moment. As for Macbeth himself, directly there is nothing to be done, he becomes morbid, brooding over his crimes past and future, and playing about them with lurid words.

1. Banquo is in Lady Macbeth's mind too, and line 38 shows that she has at least contemplated his death.

4-7. Hunter thinks that these lines are spoken by Macbeth, his 'sorriest fancies'. But they are wanted for Lady Macbeth, to connect the woman of act ii. with the woman of act v.

11. all. We should say 'any'. Cf. Sonnet lxxiv., "without all bail". Holinshed has, "They were slain without all mercy"; and Ascham, "Without all reason". Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 12. But without may here be equivalent to 'outside'. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 197.

13. scotch'd. This is Theobald's emendation for the scorched of Ff. It is also in Davenant's version. Hunter suggested switched.

14. She'll close. The severed parts will unite again.

16. Macbeth's fears have not quelled him yet. He is able to throw out a titanic defiance to heaven.

This line has thirteen syllables, which is quite unusual. Perhaps there has been mutilation; and disjoint, in the only other place where Shakespeare uses it (Hamlet, i. 2. 20), is a participle and not a verb. We might borrow two separate emendations and read—

"But let the frame of things become disjoint, Both the worlds suffer dissolution".

16. both the worlds; not 'now' and 'hereafter', as in Hamlet iv. 5. 134; but 'heaven' and 'earth'.

19. Cf. line 6.

20. to gain our peace. So F 1; but the other Ff. and most editors read, to gain our place. The F 1 reading is supported by Richard II. iii. 2. 127—

"Rich. I warrant they have made peace with Bolingbroke.
Scroop. Peace have they made with him indeed, my lord".

23. fitful, intermittent.

Cf. Measure for Measure, iii. 1. 75—

"O, I do fear thee, Claudio; and I quake,
Lest thou a feverous life shouldst entertain,
And six or seven winters more respect
Than a perpetual honour".

24. his is the almost invariable genitive of 'it' in Shakespeare. Cf. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 228.

27. Gentle my lord. The position of the adjective is due to the fact that 'my lord' became practically one word, like the French milord.

30. apply to, busy itself with.

31. No doubt the policy of courting Banquo, pursued in scene 1, and as early as act ii. scene 1, had been originally agreed on between the pair.

32. There has probably been some mutilation here. As the line stands, the adjective is used absolutely, as a participle is in iii. 1. 131.

38. Lady Macbeth's thoughts have jumped with her husband's, and he no longer hesitates to break his new enterprise to her.

nature's copy's not eterne. I think copy is used in the sense of 'copyhold', a tenure which is not permanent. Such tenures were generally held for so many lives, which gives an oldest meaning here. Cf. line 49, "that great bond".

41. cloister'd. A happy epithet for the flight of a bat backwards and forwards within a limited space.

Hecate. Here only as goddess of night; cf. ii. 1. 52, note, and note the difference of epithet. There she was "pale", here "black".

42. shard-borne. So F 1, F 2. F 3, F 4 have shard-born; but such a divergence of spelling proves very little. I prefer 'borne upon shards' to 'born among shards', because the one is part of the impression made by a beetle, as it flies at night; the other only an irrelevant fact of natural history. The one epithet is idle, the other picturesque. See Glossary, s.v.

44. note combines the senses of 'eminence' and 'infamy'. See Glossary, s.v.

49. that great bond, the bond between destiny and the house of Banquo, made known in the prophecy of the weird sisters.

50. Light thickens. A curious phrase; we should say 'darkness thickens'; but Shakespeare appears to regard darkness as produced by the thickening of light. Cf. Spenser, Shepheards Calender, "But see, the welkin thickens apace"; and Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, "Fold your flocks up, for the air 'Gins to thicken".

51. A rooky wood is not a rookery. See Glossary, s.v. rooky.

53. preys. Cf. iii. i. 122, note.

56. go with me, consent to my design. Cf. Lear, i. i. 107, "But goes thy heart with this?" But the phrase may be a mere exit note, or so used the mutilator.

Scene 3.

This scene, in which the Second Crime is accomplished, is the crisis of the play. The escape of Fleance is Macbeth's first check, and from it dates his ruin. Henceforth the irony of the play is against him, and the supernatural powers, which it indicates, slowly work out his punishment.

It is a possible theory that the mysterious Third Murderer is Macbeth himself. Always a man of action, it would not be unnatural for him to ensure the complete accomplishment of his design by himself taking a secret part in it. But cf. the note on iii. 4. 17.

4. To, in accordance with; cf. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 187.

6. lated. For the dropping of the prefix cf. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 460.

10. the note of expectation, the list of expected guests. See Glossary, s.v. note.

12. An ingenious device to avoid the introduction of horses, which could hardly have been made effective with the poor scenic provision of the Elizabethan stage.

Scene 4.

The effect of Macbeth's crimes is visible in the degeneration of his powers of mind. Formerly he was startled by the "air-drawn dagger", but was able to throw off his weakness. Now the apparition of Banquo masters him with superstitious fears; even the dread of detection cannot restrain him from yielding to them, and the potent influence which his wife had over his will is now sensibly weakened.

1. 2. at first And last, from beginning to end of the feast: but Johnson preferred To first and last, i.e. to those of all degrees.

5. keeps her state, remains seated in her chair of state: cf. Glossary, s.v. state.

6. require, claim.

14. The Clarendon Press editors explain this line as referring to the blood, "It is better outside thee than inside him". But this is very harsh: the obvious sense is, 'Better have such a blood-stained villain as you without my door, than Banquo as a guest within'. I conceive that Macbeth speaks with the murderer at a curtained door, unseen by the banqueters.

17. It must be admitted that Macbeth's apparent ignorance of Fleance's escape, as well as the "Thou canst not say I did it" of line 50 rather go against the theory that he is himself present in scene 3. Here, however, he may be merely pretending ignorance.

21. my fit. Macbeth has become subject to suspicion, the disease of tyrants. While Banquo, Fleance, Macduff live he is a prey to constant fits of terror.

26. safe: a grimly euphemistic phrase.

27. twenty trenched gashes. Cf. the "twenty mortal murders" of line 81.

32. ourselves, curiously used for 'each other'.

36. From thence, when away from home.

ceremony. Cere is a monosyllable: cf. Julius Caesar, i. 1. 70, "If you do find them decked with ceremonies". 'Cerement' is similarly used as a dissyllable.

39. There is a curious division of opinion among critics as to whether, upon the stage, the ghost of Banquo should visibly appear, or whether, as in the case of the "air-drawn dagger", its presence should be intimated to the audience by the gestures and words of the actor. If the first theory is adopted it is difficult to preserve the illusion that only Macbeth, of all the company, perceives the ghost. On the other hand, the stage-direction here, and the description given by Forman (Appendix A) seem decisive as to the Elizabethan practice; and the stage tradition still preserves it. In the two great parallel passages, Hamlet, act i., and Julius Caesar, act iv. scene 3, the difficulty does not arise. In Hamlet the ghost is visible to all the actors in the scene; in Julius Caesar they are all asleep except Brutus.

41. Notice how the irony of these hypocritical lines is really turned against the speaker.

graced, either 'honoured', 'favoured', or 'full of grace', as in Lear, i. 4. 267, "Like a graced palace".

42. Who, for 'whom'; cf. iii. i. 123.

45. As Ross speaks, Macbeth turns to his seat and finds it full. He starts back, and looks round, to the surprise of the guests, who only see an empty chair. At first (line 49) he thinks it is an unseemly practical joke; then the truth breaks upon him, and in a low, broken voice he addresses the ghost (line 50).

50. Cf. note on line 17.

53. Lady Macbeth, who only knows vaguely the cause of Banquo's absence, has sat in silence since the beginning of the scene, watching her husband's demeanour. She cannot see the ghost, but Macbeth's disturbance has not escaped her. Making an excuse to the guests, she draws him aside, and attempts, as of old, to steel his spirit with her own. But he has almost passed out of the sphere of her power.

57. shall, often used by Elizabethans in the sense of 'are sure to'. Cf. iv. 3. 47, and Abbott, Sk. Gr. § 315.

extend his passion, prolong his suffering. Passion is used in its wider sense of any strong emotion.

60. proper stuff, mere, absolute nonsense. Cf. Glossary, s.v. proper.

65. Cf. Richard II. v. i. 40—

"In winter's tedious nights sit by the fire
With good old folks and let them tell thee tales
Of woeful ages long ago betid";

and Winter's Tale, ii. i. 25—

"A sad tale's best for winter; I have one Of sprites and goblins".

69. There is a struggle in Macbeth's mind between superstition and the new strength which his wife's common-sense gives him.

72. Cf. Spenser, Faerie Queene, ii. 8. 16—

"What herce or steed (said he) should he have dight,
But be entombed in the raven or the kite".

75. Macbeth has a trick of general philosophical reflection, which is characteristic of Shakespeare's heroes at this period of his development. Hamlet is full of it.

76. humane. So the Ff. spell; but as 'human' and 'humane' were not then distinguished, as now, by spelling, we are at liberty to understand either shade of meaning.

gentle weal. So Ff. Warburton proposed general weal = 'common-weal'. If gentle is right it is used proleptically—'purged it into gentleness'; cf. Richard II. ii. 3. 94, "Fighting her pale-faced villages with war".

81. Cf. line 27.

mortal, deadly; cf. iv. 3. 3, and Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 1—

“Of man’s first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world and all our woe”.

86. Cf. line 53. Doubtless this explanation had been agreed upon between husband and wife for any such emergency.

90. Macbeth is sufficiently recovered to be defiant; and, as before, the moment his thoughts turn to Banquo the vision appears. It has been suggested that there are two ghosts in the scene, and that one of them—either the first or second—is that of Duncan. But the theory is both fanciful and untrue to psychology. For the ghosts are after all the figments of Macbeth’s imagination, and that is naturally wholly occupied with the more recent crime.

92. all to all, a drinking formula: ‘all good wishes to you all’. Cf. Timon of Athens, i. 2. 234, “All to you”; and Henry VIII. i. 4. 38, “To you all, good health”. Johnson suggested hail to all, and Staunton Call to all.

95. no speculation, no light of intellect. There may be a reminiscence of Psalm cv., “Eyes have they, but they see not”.

101. the Hyrcan tiger. There is mention of both ‘Hyrcan tigers’ and ‘the rhinoceros’ on opposite pages of Philemon Holland’s translation of Pliny’s Natural History (1601, bk. viii. c. 18). Hyrcania is a somewhat vague term for the district south of the Caspian. Daniel in his Sonnets (1594) has—

“restore thy fierce and cruel mind
To Hyrcan tigers and to ruthless bears”.

Perhaps the epithet is due to Vergil, Aeneid, iv. 366—

“duris te genuit cautibus horrens
Caucasus, Hyrcanaeque admorunt ubera tigris”.

104. to the desert, where we should be man to man: cf. Richard II. iv. 1. 73, “I dare meet Surrey in a wilderness”.

105. inhabit. So F1. The later Ff. have inhibit, which might possibly mean ‘refuse’. Inhabit is simply ‘remain’, ‘stay where I am’; but the neuter sense is unusual. Kinnear conjectured I inherit, which would govern trembling.

106. the baby of a girl. The Clarendon Press editors interpret this as the feeble child of an immature mother; but ‘baby’ can mean a ‘doll’ or ‘puppet’. So “a babe of clouts”, in King John, iii. 4. 58. Cf. Glossary, s.v.

110. admired, admirable, in the sense of ‘something to admire’ or ‘wonder at’. The use of a positive for an hypothetical verbal adjective is common in Shakespeare. So "unavoided" for 'unavoidable' in Richard II. ii. 1. 268, and Richard III. iv. 2. 217, "unvalued" for 'invaluable' in Richard III. i. 4. 27. Cf. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 375.

111. overcome, in a somewhat literal sense, as we say 'over-shadow'. The point of the comparison lies in the unexpectedness with which a cloud in summer darkens the fields and then passes off again.

112-114. 'I do not understand my own state of mind, when I see you so unaffected by what has moved me.'

119. Cf. ii. 3. 150.

122. Macbeth's vague dread resolves itself into a definite fear of discovery, through some unnoticed and unlikely means. And his suspicions, so awaked, fix themselves on Macduff. Already the Second Crime is leading to the Third, as it was itself led to by the First.

123. Stones. Mr. Paton refers this to the 'rocking-stones' or 'Clacha breath', by which the Druids tested guilt. It was supposed that only the innocent could shake them. There is one near Glamis Castle.

trees. Cf. Vergil, Aeneid, iii. 22, where Polydorus, changed into a tree, describes his death.

124. understood relations, i.e. the secret mystical relations between things, which soothsayers alone understand; such as the relations between character and the lines on a palm, or between a pack of cards and a murder.

127. at odds with, disputing with.

128. How say'st thou, as we should say, 'What do you make of this?' Line 130 shows that it was not Lady Macbeth who told Macbeth of the refusal.

131. Macbeth's suspicions and his guilty conscience have led him to use all the devices of the tyrant, treachery as well as blood.

not a one. So the Ft. Theobald conjectured not a Thane.

137. in ... in. A preposition is often repeated for the sake of clearness; cf. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 407.

141. the season, that which preserves, gives freshness to.

142. Macbeth means by his "self-abuse" the abnormal condition of his 'self', which makes him such a slave to superstition and fear. He goes on to say, 'Such fear only attends the beginning of a career of crime before custom has hardened the conscience'.

The action of the last four scenes has been continuous, occupying the afternoon and night of a single day. In line 132 Macbeth fixes a visit to the witches for "to-morrow". Therefore sc. 5 may be regarded as synchronous with sc. 4, while act iv. sc. 1 comes on the next morning. For the difficulty in the time of sc. 6 see the notes upon it.

Scene 5.

I believe that this scene is one of the additions made to the original play by Middleton or some other interpolator. See Introduction, pp. 7-9. The weird and gloomy atmosphere which hangs about Shakespeare's witches is gone; it is replaced by such prettinesses as that of lines 23, 24. Hecate, an entirely new and unnecessary character, is introduced. The metre is essentially iambic, and not, as with Shakespeare, trochaic; while the song at line 34 occurs in full in Middleton's Witch.

1. Hecate is in classical myth Artemis or Diana in her aspect as an infernal deity. In the superstitions of the Middle Ages and the Renaissance she became the Queen of Witches, just as Diana, under the name of Titania, became the Queen of Fairies. This belief is very old. Apuleius indeed (De Asino Aureo) gives the Queen of Witches the name Caupona; but Scot (Discoverie of Witchcraft, iii. 16; cf. also xii. 3) quotes a decree of the 4th century Council of Ancyra, condemning the profession of witches "that in the night times they ride abroad with Diana, the goddess of the Pagans, or else with Herodias". The decrees of this Council are, however, suspected to be spurious. In Jonson's Sad Shepherd, act ii. sc. 3, Maudlin, the witch, says—

"our dame Hecate
Made it her gaing-night over the kirkyard".

Cf. also note on ii. 1. 52.

angery, a rare form of the adverb, found also in Two Gentlemen, i. 2. 62, and in King John, iv. 1. 82.

11. This looks like a reminiscence of the ungrateful son of Hecate in Middleton's Witch.

15. Acheron, a river in Greece, popularly regarded as a passage to the lower world; incongruously placed by the interpolator on the heath near Forres.

24. profound, "with deep or hidden qualities" (Johnson). The nearest parallel is As You Like It, v. 2. 67, "a magician most profound in his art, and yet not damnable". But the Clarendon Press editors explain it as "deep, and therefore ready to fall".

Steevens says, "This vaporous drop seems to have been meant for the same as the virus lunare of the ancients, being a foam which the moon was supposed to shed on particular herbs or other objects when strongly solicited by enchantment. Lucan introduces Erichtho using it;—'et virus large lunare ministrat', Pharsalia, v. 666".

32. security, the consciousness of security, whether true or false.

It is the sense of the Latin securus. The Clarendon Press editors quote Webster, Duchess of Malfi, v. 2—

“Security some men call the suburbs of hell,
Only a dead wall between”.

33. Come away, come away. This song occurs in act iii. sc. 3 of Middleton's Witch, and was inserted with some variations in the 1673 edition of this play. Cf. Appendix B.

Scene 6.

As in the last scene of act ii., so here we get a side-light upon the story; the outside point of view is represented by the Lords, who fulfil the function of the chorus in a Greek drama. Macbeth's conduct has awaked suspicion; his tyranny has made him detested, and already there are hints of the coming retribution.

Another Lord. Johnson suggested that this direction of the Ff. might be a mistake for An. i.e. Angus. Dyce found Ross inserted in his copy of the Folio.

1. All the first part of Lennox's speech is consciously ironical, as the word “tyrant” in line 22 shows.

3. borne, not, I think, ‘suffered’ by the subjects, but ‘carried out’ by the king; cf. line 17.

8. Who cannot want the thought. There seems to be a superfluous negative here. The sense is clearly, ‘Who wants, i.e. is without the thought?’ Several attempts have been made to alter the text, but probably the phrase is only an instance of the Elizabethan double negative. Cf. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 406.

21. from, on account of.

27. Of is used often to express the agent where we should use ‘by’. Cf. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 170.

29. his, that which is paid to him.

35. The natural order is curiously inverted.

36. free, without slavery.

38. Many verbs ending in -te, -t, and -d, do not add -ed in forming their participle. (Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 342.) Thus 1 Henry IV. v. i. 72, “These things indeed you have articulate”; and Hamlet, iii. i. 163, “And I of ladies most deject and wretched”.

their. So Ff. Most editors accept Hanmer's the, but their is perhaps needed to distinguish Macbeth from Edward.

40. with, receiving.

41. cloudy, gloomy, sullen; or as Delius says, “toreboding, ominous”.

me. the ethic dative, as in the stock example, “knock me on this door". It is often used for emphasis, as one might claim attention by raising a forefinger.

42. as who should say. The phrase is subjunctive, introducing a simile. See Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 257, and cf. Merchant of Venice, i. 2. 45, "He doth nothing but frown, as who should say, 'If you will not have me, choose'".

43. clogs, burdens.

49. Under a hand accursed, depends upon "suffering".

There is a little difficulty as to the time occupied by this scene: iii. 4. 132 shows that iii. 4 and iv. 1 are on successive days; and at least part of iv. 1 must have belonged to the original play. Yet if iii. 4. 130 be compared with iii. 6. 40 a considerable interval will seem to be required between the two scenes.

Act IV.—Scene I.

Just as the witches symbolized Macbeth's entrance on the path of crime, so now their sinister presence is prophetic of his punishment. By evil suggestions and ambiguous sayings they inspire in him a false confidence, and lure him on to ruin. The interpolations in this scene are insignificant and easily to be distinguished; the loathsome spells and devilish incantations of the Shakespearian part of it are in harmony with the uncanny note of the whole play. Yet in the elaborate vision which is conjured up for Macbeth one cannot but see a concession to the love for masks and pageants of the Jacobean court.

1. the brinded cat; the "Graymalkin" of i. 1. 8, the familiar of the First Witch. Probably it is on account of the cat's stealthy and nocturnal ways that it plays so great a part in sorcery.

2. Odd numbers were magical. The Ff. read Thrice, and once, not Thrice and once (i.e. four times); so I conceive that thrice is merely a repetition of the same word in the preceding line.

hedge-pig. In i. 1. 9 the familiar of the Second Witch is a toad; but the hedgehog or 'urchin' is also a creature of ill-omen. Prospero uses it to vex Caliban (The Tempest, ii. 2. 5, 10).

3. Harpier, presumably the familiar of the Third Witch. The word may be a reminiscence of 'harpy', or, as Mr. Paton suggests, of the 'Harper' crab.

5. Witches seem to have attempted to impress the imagination of the ignorant by the use of quaint and nasty ingredients for their charms. Cf. Scot's Discoverie of Witchcraft, and Middleton's Witch, passim.

6. cold; apparently to be scanned as equivalent to a dissyllable, 'co-old'; cf. Midsummer Night's Dream, ii. 1. 7, "Swifter than the moon's sphere". But Rowe and many others read Under the cold stone, Steevens under coldest stone, Keightley underneath cold stone, &c.

8. Hunter quotes a paper by Dr. Davy in the Philosophical Transactions for 1826, to show that the toad has venom diffused under its skin.

16. Of course a blind-worm has no sting.

23. Witches' mummy. Mummy was a common drug, but if it was really efficacious it was probably due to the spices used in embalmment. Cf. Sir T. Browne, On Urn-burial, "The Egyptian mummies, which Cambyses or time hath spared, avarice now consumeth. Mummie is become merchandise, Mizraim cures wounds, and Pharaoh is sold for balsams". And in his Fragment on Mummies, "The common opinion of the virtues of mummy bred great consumption thereof, and princes and great men contended for this strange panacea, wherein the Jews dealt largely, manufacturing mummies from dead carcases and giving them the names of kings, while specifics were compounded from crosses and gibbet-leavings".

27. The yew is not only poisonous, but also grows freely in churchyards.

28. in the moon's eclipse. Cf. line 25, "digg'd i' the dark". It is obvious that darkness is proper for the enterprises of witches. "They love darkness... because their deeds are evil". And especially suitable is the mysterious darkness due to eclipses, to which unscientific eyes have always attributed a supernatural and ominous character. Cf. Hamlet, i. 1, 117—

"A little ere the mightiest Julius fell...

... and the moist star,

Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,

Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse".

See also line 138, note.

30. "It is observable that Shakespeare, on this great occasion, which involves the fate of a king, multiplies all the circumstances of horror. The babe, whose finger is used, must be strangled in its birth; the grease must not only be human, but must have dropped from a gibbet, the gibbet of a murderer; and even the sow, whose blood is used, must have offended nature by devouring her own farrow. These are touches of judgment and genius." (Johnson.)

39-43. These lines are in the style of act iii. sc. 5, and should, I think, be regarded as an interpolation. They are marked by the appearance of Hecate, by a change from trochaic to iambic metre, and by a song found in full in the Witch.

Enter Hecate to the other three Witches. This is the stage-direct-tion adopted by the Cambridge editors. The Ff. read and the other three Witches, but the other three witches are already on the stage. Probably it is a mistake of the interpolator's. It is most unlikely that Shakespeare meant to introduce six witches, but just possible that the interpolator did so for the sake of his dance. Mr. Fleay has a fantastic theory, which is discussed in Appendix E. He has, I think, been confused by the interpolator. If the passages bracketed in my text are disregarded there are no real inconsistencies of tone left between the remaining scenes; nor is there any reason to suppose that so large a portion of the play is by another hand than Shakespeare's, as this theory would imply.

43. Black spirits. &c. For the rest of the song indicated here see Appendix B. It occurs also in Middleton's Witch, act v. scene 2. Dr. Brinsley Nicholson points out a passage in the Discourse of Devils and Spirits, ch. xxxiii., appended to Scot's Discoverie of Witchcraft (1584), which gives the origin of this song. Scot speaks of "Brian Darcie's he spirits and she spirits, Tittie and Tiffin, Suckin and Pidgin, Liard and Robin, &c.; his white spirits and black spirits, gray spirits and red spirits". The reference is to a tract by "W. W." [Brian Darcey] on the Witches at St. Osee's, Essex, in which the names and colours of the familiars spoken of are always carefully given.

44. It is a common superstition that sudden bodily pains are ominous of evil.

55. bladed corn, corn when the ear is still green and enclosed in the blade. This is less likely to be 'lodged' than fully ripened corn, which is heavy in the ear, and so a more terrible storm would be needed to effect it. Collier proposed bleaded, i.e. 'ripe', 'ready for the sickle', from A. S. blaedan. But Staunton quotes the article on Husbandry in Comenius, Janua Linguarum (1673), "As soon as standing corn shoots up to a blade it is in danger of scathe from tempest"; and he suggests that Shakespeare had in his mind a phrase in Scot's Discoverie of Witchcraft, bk. i. ch. 4, "They can transfer corn in the blade from one place to another". Cf. Richard II. iii. 3. 161—

"We'll make foul weather with despised tears;
Our sighs and they shall lodge the summer corn
And make a dearth in this revolting land".

'Summer corn' is still 'bladed', and not ripe.

59. nature's germens, i.e. the seeds or elements of which all nature is compounded. So the whole phrase means 'until the order of nature is dissolved in chaos'. Cf. Milton's description of Chaos in Paradise Lost, ii. 910—

"Into this wild abyss,
The womb of Nature, and perhaps her grave,
Of neither Sea, nor Shore, nor Air, nor Fire,
But all these in their pregnant causes mixed

Confusedly, and which thus must ever fight,
Unless the Almighty Maker them ordain
His dark materials to create new worlds—”.

60. sicken, i.e. with satiety. Destruction is personified. Cf. Twelfth Night, i. 1. 3—

“Give me excess of it, that, surfeiting,
The appetite may sicken, and so die”.

65. nine, a mysterious number; cf. i. 3. 36, note.

sweaten, an irregularly formed participle. See Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 344, and cf. Merchant of Venice, iv. 1. 77, “When they are fretten with the gusts of heaven”.

68. “The armed head represents symbolically Macbeth’s head cut off and brought to Malcolm by Macduff. The bloody child is Macduff untimely ripped from his mother’s womb. The child with a crown on his head and a bough in his hand is the royal Malcolm, who ordered his soldiers to hew them down a bough, and bear it before them to Dunsinane.” (Upton.)

78. ‘Listening with all one’s ears’ is a common expression of the same nature as this.

84. take a bond, i.e. make the promise of fate an irrevocable one.

88. Cf. i. 5. 29, note. round and top, not merely an allusion to the shape and position of a crown, but also, as Mr. Grant White points out, because “the crown not only completes and rounds, as with the perfection of a circle, the claim to sovereignty, but it is figuratively the top, the summit, of ambitious hopes”. Shakespeare often uses ‘top’ in this sense—e.g. “the top of admiration”, “the top of judgment”, “the top of honour”, “the top of happy hours”. Theobald proposed type.

93. Birnam is a hill near Dunkeld, 12 miles from Dunsinane, or Dunsinnan, which is 7 miles from Perth.

Dunsinane. Elsewhere in the play Shakespeare accents Dunsinane. Both accents are also found in Wyntown’s Cronykill.

95. impress, force into his service.

97. Rebellion’s head. The Ff. have rebellious dead. The modern reading is Theobald’s, and I think the allusion to the apparition of an armed head justifies it. The suggested Rebellious head is a possible alternative.

98. our. Some editors would read your; but I think the word signifies ‘Macbeth, who is dear to Fate, as well as himself’.

100. mortal custom, the custom which all men must submit to, —that of dying.

106. noise. The term is generally used for music by Elizabethan writers.

113. hair. Johnson unnecessarily proposed air. Cf. Winter's Tale, v. I. 127—

“Your father's image is so hit in you,
His very air, that I should call you brother”.

116. Start, eyes, i.e. from your sockets, that I may behold no longer.

117. the crack of doom, i.e. the thunder-peal that announces the Last Judgment. Cf. i. 2. 37, note.

119. A mirror was a common mode of divination. Cf. Spenser, Faerie Queene, iii. 2, and the “virtuous glass” of Cambuscan in Chaucer's Squire's Tale.

121. “This was intended as a compliment to King James the First, who first united the two islands and three kingdoms under one head: whose house also was said to be descended from Banquo” (Warburton). See Introduction, p. 15.

The eight kings are Robert II. (1371), Robert III., and the six Jameses. Those in the glass are James's successors.

Hunter quotes from Cotton Mather's Magnalia Christi Americana a description of a similar show of the kings of France, made by a magician to Catherine de Medicis.

125-132. Another interpolation; and another confusion in the stage-directions. Hecate ‘retired’ at line 43, and has never re-entered since. The “antic round” is ludicrously incongruous here.

138. Cf. Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 662—

“Nor uglier follow the night-hag, when, called
In secret, riding through the air she comes;
Lured with the smell of infant blood, to dance
With Lapland witches, while the labouring moon
Eclipses at their charms”.

This passage also serves to illustrate lines 28, 30. Milton was evidently familiar with Macbeth, and once contemplated using the subject himself.

142. As to the difficulty in time involved here, cf. note at end of act iii. scene 6.

The flight of Macduff, with that of Fleance, and the deceitful prophecy of the witches, are the three “accidents” which point to the working of spiritual forces against Macbeth.

Scene 2.

Macbeth's Third Crime marks a stage in his moral degradation; compared with those that went before it is purposeless, merely an expression of the tyrannic mind, partly unhinged by fear. And its only effect is to make the day of reckoning more certain. A slight relief to the tragedy is afforded by the opening dialogue between Lady Macduff and her son. Shakespeare's children—cf. Mamillius in the Winter's Tale—are singularly precocious in their naïveté. He uses them as effective mediums of irony. An added touch of pathos is given by the mistrust of her husband in which Lady Macduff dies. It should be observed that Lady Macbeth knows nothing of this murder until it is accomplished: the separation between her and her husband has advanced yet further.

Macduff's Castle, traditionally placed at Dunne-merle Castle, Culross, Perthshire.

9. the natural touch, family affection, which all things in nature share. Cf. Troilus and Cressida, iii. 3. 175, "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin".

Shakespeare's illustration of the wren is drawn rather from Euphuistic than actual natural history.

17. The fits o' the season. Heath explains this as "what befits the season"; but it seems better to take it with other editors as a metaphor from human disease, such as an intermittent fever.

19. know ourselves, i.e. know ourselves to be traitors.

when we hold rumour, i.e. when we accept rumours, because we fear them to be true.—This phrase describes Lady Macduff's condition, as the one immediately preceding does that of her husband.

22. and move. The Clarendon Press editors propose Each way and none. If the Ff. reading is kept, 'move' may either be a verb co-ordinate with 'float', or a substantive, 'motion', 'direction'. In either case it is an awkward phrase.

27. I think Ross means that the situation appears to him so pathetic that he should break down, if he stayed longer.

36. The emphasis in this line is on poor. They surely refers to the traps, and is not a repetition of the nominative "poor birds".

44. The broken metre gradually merges into prose, here as in act ii. scene 3 used by Shakespeare for purposes of dramatic relief.

45. A 'traitor' not to her, but, in the technical sense, to Macbeth. This interpretation gives a keener point to line 54.

66. perfect, perfectly versed.

70. To fright you, in frightening you. For a similar indefinite use of the infinitive cf. v. 2. 23, and Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 356.

71. He compares the harm which he is doing by frightening her with the far worse cruelty which others are about to do to her.

83. shag-hair'd. So Steevens for the shag-eared of Ff.

A day or two may be regarded as intervening between scenes 1 and 2 of this act, and several days, sufficient for Ross's journey from Scotland, between scenes 2 and 3.

Scene 3.

The cup of Macbeth's iniquity is full. His final Crime is directly followed by the preparation for his Punishment. In this scene, the only tedious one in the play, we learn of the preparation of an army to depose him; the characters of Macduff and Malcolm, contrasts to his as subject and king, are brought out; and in the episode of the king's evil, lines 140-159, the peacefulness of England throws into relief the desperate condition of the neighbouring kingdom. Incidentally another delicate compliment to James I. is introduced.

1. Cf. Richard II. iii. 2. 155—

“For God's sake, let us sit upon the ground
And tell sad stories of the death of kings”.

3. mortal, death-dealing: cf. iii. 4. 81, note.

4. Macbeth's outrage against the Macduffs was only one of many. The usurper, or ‘tyrant’ in the Greek sense, generally becomes, as Plato pointed out, an oppressor, or ‘tyrant’ in the modern sense.

8. The attitude of Malcolm in the first part of this scene, down to line 114, is actuated by suspicion. Staggered by Macbeth's treachery, he does not know where to find faith. Macduff, for all his loyal professions, may be only an emissary of the tyrant. Cf. line 117.

10. to friend, an adjectival phrase=‘friendly’.

12. whose sole name, the mere mention of whose name.

15. deserve. So Theobald for discern of the Ff.

and wisdom. The omission of the verb is characteristic of the compressed utterance of this play.

19. recoil, swerve from right in obeying the commands of a king. Did Shakespeare intend a satire on diplomacy?

23. Cf. i. 4. 12.

25. Macduff's desertion of his wife and child have aroused Malcolm's suspicions, and so Macduff's hopes of finding him ready to lead an army to Scotland are lost.

26. in that rawness, so hurriedly.

27. motives, occasionally used by Shakespeare of persons, as in Othello, iv. 2. 43, “Am I the motive of these tears?” If Macduff really loved his family their welfare would be the natural motive of his actions, and he would be bound to them with ‘knots of love’. But in Macduff the patriot is stronger than the husband and father.

29. Malcolm apologizes for the suspicion which he only half feels. He is obliged to be cautious.

47. Shall; cf. iii. 4. 57, note.

50. Why does Malcolm make this self-accusation? Partly to try the temper of Macduff's patriotism. For it is only Malcolm's private sins that his subject regards as 'portable'. When he adds that he lacks also 'the king-becoming graces', then Macduff's 'noble passion' shows itself. But I think there is a touch of deeper psychological insight in it than this. Is it not true that in the critical moments of life one is often suddenly oppressed with a sense of one's own weaknesses, and dormant if not actual tendencies to evil, which seem to cry aloud for expression, confession? For a similar instance cf. Hamlet, iii. i. 124.

51. particulars, 'special forms', such as he subsequently enumerates.

52. open'd, made known, or possibly, carrying on the metaphor of 'grafted', 'burst into leaf and flower'. Collier proposed ripen'd.

55. confineless, unbounded.

58. Luxurious, lascivious, the invariable sense of the word in Shakespeare.

59. Sudden, violent.

64. continent, restraining.

67. In nature may go with intemperance and = 'of nature'; or with tyranny; if the latter, the phrase illustrates the Platonic description of the overmastering passion in the soul, as being to a man what a tyrant is to a state.

71. Convey, i.e. obtain in secrecy. Cf. the slang use of the term by Pistol in Merry Wives, i. 3. 32, "'Convey,' the wise it call. 'Steal!' Foh! a fico for the phrase!"

77. affection, nature.

80. his, this one's.

86. summer-seeming lust, i.e. 'lust which besseems youth, the summer of life', and is therefore not enduring, whereas avarice 'sticks deeper' in the soul, and does not pass away. Or we may interpret the epithet as 'summerlike', and compare with Malone Donne's Love's Alchemy, "a winter-seeming summer's night". Many emendations have been proposed, as summer-teeming (Theobald), summer-seeding (Heath), summer-seething (Johnson).

89. portable, bearable.

93. perseverance. Note the accent.

95. relish, savour, touch.

96. the division of, every form of.

99. Uproar. The meaning is obvious, but the word not found elsewhere. Keightley suggests uproot or uptear. But for the idea, cf. Richard II. i. 3. 132—

"To wake our peace, which in our country's cradle Draws the sweet infant breath of gentle sleep".

106. Since that. 'That' is often attached to prepositions to give them the force of conjunctions. So "for that" in line 185: cf. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 287.

108. blaspheme, slander.

111. Died, i.e. spiritually. Cf. 1 Corinthians, xv. 31, "I die daily".

The missing accent here may be filled up either by accenting 'livéd', or by making a dissyllable of 'fare', or by allowing for a pause.

112. repeat'st, 'tellest', with no idea of repetition.

134. Old Siward, Earl of Northumberland, and practically an independent chieftain in the north.

135. at a point; not 'at a place agreed upon', as Warburton thought, but 'ready', 'prepared'. A commoner form of the phrase is found in Hamlet, i. 2. 200, "Armed at point exactly"; it occurs also in Lear, i. 4. 347; iii. 1. 33.

136. 'May our chance of good fortune be proportionate to the justness of our cause.'

142. stay, wait for. The preposition is often omitted, especially after verbs of motion. Here, however, it is rather the absence of motion. Cf. also v. 8. 13, and Abbott, Sh. Gr. §§ 198-200.

convinces, vanquishes: cf. i. 7. 64.

143. assay, attempt. The whole sentence means, 'Their malady is beyond the physician's skill'.

146. the evil; the disease of scrofula, known as the king's evil, because it was believed that the touch of an anointed king was the only remedy for it. Holinshed mentions the superstition in his account of King Edward the Confessor: "He used to help those that were vexed with the disease, commonly called the king's evil, and left that virtue, as it were a portion of inheritance, unto his successors the kings of the realm". This miraculous power was claimed by several of the Plantagenets and Tudors; and James I., always superstitious, was especially proud of exercising it. See Nichols's Progresses, vol. iii. 264, 273. Consequently this episode is of the nature of a courtly compliment. But it has a dramatic purpose also. The picture of the good King Edward curing his subjects' disorders is in strong contrast to the tyranny and cruelty of Macbeth beyond the border.

148. here-remain. Cf. line 133, "here approach".

153. This was the practice of the Stuarts; originally an ordinary coin was used, but from the time of Charles II. a special 'touch-piece' was struck. In the British Museum may be seen one hung by Queen Anne round the neck of Dr. Johnson.

154. A form of prayer for the ceremony was inserted into the Book of Common Prayer in 1684, and left out in 1719.

157. Here again Shakespeare follows Holinshed: "As hath been thought, he was inspired with the gift of prophecy, and also to have had the gift of healing infirmities and diseases".

160. I suppose Malcolm recognizes his countryman by his dress.

166. A common antithesis; cf. Romeo and Juliet, ii. 3. 9, "The earth, that's nature's mother, is her tomb"; and Pericles, ii. 3. 45—

"Whereby I see that Time is king of men.

He's both their parent, and he is their grave";

and Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 911, of Chaos, "The womb of Nature, and perhaps her grave".

170. modern, moderate, common, ordinary; cf. Glossary, s.v.

171. For the grammar of the sentence, cf. ii. 1. 57, note, and for the use of 'who' for 'whom', Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 274.

173. or ere. 'Or' in the sense of 'before' is derived, like 'ere', from the A. S. ær. The two forms were combined for the sake of emphasis, when the original meaning of 'or' was forgotten and it was looked on as a mere conjunction. Or possibly 'ere' in this phrase is really 'e'er' or 'ever', and 'or ere', a form equivalent to 'when-ever', 'wherever'. Cf. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 131.

174. nice, elaborate. In allusion to the style in which Ross has described the woes of Scotland.

175. doth hiss the speaker, for touching on matters already out of date.

176. teems is used without a preposition in Henry V. v. 2. 51—

"The even mead . . .
Conceives by idleness and nothing teems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs".

177. For the irony of this passage, with the double meanings of 'well' and 'peace', cf. iii. 4. 25, and Richard II. iii. 2. 127—

"Rich. I warrant they have made peace with Bolingbroke.
Scroop. Peace have they made with him indeed, my lord," &c.

183. out, in arms; as in the common phrase, 'out in the '45'.

185. For that; cf. line 106, note.

202. possess, in a causative sense, 'make them possessors of'. Cf. Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 11. 21, "I will possess you of that ship and treasure".

208. The metaphor means, 'Do not try to conceal or suppress your emotion'. Collier quotes from Florio's translation of Mon-taigne's Essays, bk. i. ch. 2, "All passions that may be tasted and digested are but mean and slight.

Curæ leves loquuntur, ingentes stupent.

Light cares can freely speake,
Great cares heart rather breake."

The Latin is that of Seneca, Hippolytus, 607. Cf. also Webster, Vittoria Corombona, "Those are the killing griefs, which dare not speak".

210. Cf. line 142, note.

214. The situation has changed since the beginning of the scene. It is now Malcolm who is anxious to push on to the contemplated enterprise, while Macduff, in his turn, is deadened by personal grief, and desires only to 'weep his sad bosom empty'.

216. He has no children. Possibly this may refer to Macbeth, and then the sense will be, 'Revenge is impossible, for I cannot kill his children as he killed mine'. But, historically, Macbeth left at least one son, and in i. 7. 54, Lady Macbeth says—

"I have given suck, and know
How tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me".

In any case a better sense is given by interpreting 'he' as Malcolm, and the meaning as parallel to that of King John, iii. 4. 91, "He talks to me, that never had a son".

220. Dispute it, deal with the situation.

229. Convert is used intransitively in Richard II. v. 1. 66; 3, 64, "Thy overflow of good converts to bad".

235. tune. Rowe's emendation for the time of Ff. It is obvious that in an ill-written MS. the two words would closely resemble one another.

manly. Adjectives, especially those ending in -ly, are often used for adverbs; cf. 'easy', ii. 3. 143; and 'free', ii. 1. 19; also Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 1.

237. 'All that we have left to do is to take leave.'

239. Steevens explains the instruments to be Malcolm, Macduff, and the rest, who will carry out the will of heaven; and he interprets put on as 'encourage', quoting Lear, i. 4. 227—

"That you protect this course, and put it on
By your allowance".

But does not instruments mean simply 'weapons', 'armour'; as in Hamlet, v. 2. 327, "The treacherous instrument is in thy hand"?

240. An expression of the fatalism that characterizes this play. Cf. i. 3. 147, "Time and the hour runs through the roughest day".

Act V. Scene I.

The stormy passions of the last scene are followed by one of subdued whispered horror. The retribution has begun. We see first its workings in the soul of Lady Macbeth. Throughout she is more spiritual than her husband, and with her it takes the form, not of fear, but of remorse—a brooding remorse that gradually unstrings every nerve. She has taken less and less part in each succeeding crime; since act iii. scene 4 she has been absent from the stage; she has almost passed out of the life of her husband. Yet in her disordered brain, the details of his crimes jostle with those of her own. The struggle with memory and conscience has proved too much for her; her old self-command and triumphant sovereignty of will are gone.

It is not quite easy to say why prose is used in this scene. Perhaps it appeared proper to the broken utterance of sleep-walking; and of course the Doctor and Gentlewoman, whose emotions are on a lower plane throughout, could not be allowed to use blank verse if Lady Macbeth did not.

“Whether the deep melancholy of remorse often tends to exhibit itself in somnambulism is a fact which, on scientific grounds, may be doubted.” (Bucknill, Mad Folk of Shakespeare.)

4. into the field. It would appear that Macbeth took the field to put down the Scottish rebels; cf. iv. 3. 181, sgg. On the approach of the English army he was driven into Dunsinane Castle; cf. v. 2. 12; 5. 5.

5. nightgown: cf. ii. 2. 70.

6. Lady Macbeth tries to get rid of the oppression of her secret by committing it to paper, as the barber whispered the truth about Midas' ears to the rushes.

12. watching, waking.

26. She cannot bear the horrors of darkness; for, when the outer senses are at rest, memory is most active.

39. Cf. Lady Macbeth's words in ii. 2. 66, “A little water clears us of this deed”; so untrue, as she knows now, except in the merest physical sense.

40. She remembers the clock striking, the moment when she was to summon Macbeth to Duncan's chamber.

Hell is murky. She imagines herself arguing with Macbeth's fears. This phrase is not an expression of her own thoughts, for it is the sense of sin, not the fear of hell, with which she is burdened.

51. Go to; a common phrase of reproach, or sometimes encouragement, as in Merchant of Venice, ii. 2. 169, “Go to, here's a simple line of life”. Cf. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 185.

56. "The smell has never been successfully used as a means of impressing the imagination with terror, pity, or any of the deeper emotions, except in this dreadful, sleep-walking scene of the guilty queen, and in one parallel scene of the Greek drama, as wildly terrible as this. It is that passage of the Agamemnon of Aeschylus, where the captive prophetess, Cassandra, wrapt in visionary inspiration, scents first the smell of blood and then the vapours of the tomb breathing from the palace of Atrides as ominous of his approaching murder." (Verplanck.)

Steevens quotes Webster, Vittoria Corombona (ed. Dyce, vol. i. p. 146), "Here's a white hand: can blood so soon be wash'd out?"

72. The Doctor understands fully now.

84. the means of all annoyance, i.e. all things with which she might injure herself. He expects Lady Macbeth to commit suicide; as, no doubt, she does in scene 5. Cf. v. 8. 70.

An interval of time may be allowed between this scene and act iv. scene 3, and yet another before act v. scene 2.

Scene 2.

Lady Macbeth has passed from the stage; the rest of her tragedy is acted out in silence; only echoes of it reach us. Macbeth is left alone, face to face with his destiny. Scenes 2 and 3 put before us the tempers of the opposing parties: on the one side, loyalty and hatred of the tyrant; on the other, a spirit broken and bewildered by sin and terror.

2. His uncle Siward, cf. v. 6. 2. Holinshed makes Siward Malcolm's grandfather. Shakespeare uses 'cousin' loosely enough, and in Othello, i. i. 112, 'nephews' is put for 'grandsons'; but there is no exact parallel for this use of 'uncle'.

3. dear, close, personal. Cf. Glossary, s.v.

4. bleeding may be a substantive, but I think it is here an adjective to 'alarm', which is practically equivalent to 'battle'. 'Bleeding' is an epithet of 'war' in Richard II. iii. 3. 94.

5. mortified. The word is generally found in a spiritual sense of one who is dead to the world. So Love's Labour's Lost, i. i. 28—

"My loving lord, Dumain is mortified:
The grosser manner of these world's delights
He throws upon this gross world's baser slaves".

And cf. St. Paul, Romans, viii. 13; Colossians, iii. 5. But here the meaning seems to be 'deadened', 'insensible', as in Lear, ii. 3. 15, "their numb'd and mortified bare arms".

Birnam. The mention of Birnam here and of Dunsinane in line 12 prepares the audience for the working out of the witches' prophecy.

11. first of manhood: cf. "near'st of life", iii. i. 118, note.

15. The metaphor appears to be from a man with a distempered and swollen body. Macbeth's 'cause' means his affairs generally, which are getting beyond his power to direct.

23. to: cf. iv. 2. 70, note.

27. the medicine of the sickly weal, i.e. Malcolm; medicine may here mean 'doctor', rather than 'physic', as the Clarendon Press editors think; but the analogous use of 'purge' in the next line is against this. Cf. also iv. 3. 214.

30. sovereign, in the double sense of 'royal' and 'a potent remedy'.

weeds: cf. the elaborate comparison of England to an unweeded garden in Richard II. iii. 4. The parallels between the two plays are numerous and striking. Richard II. was probably written in 1595, but both plays deal with tyranny, and in returning to the subject Shakespeare seems to have recalled also certain phrases and metaphors from his earlier treatment of it.

Scene 3.

Macbeth has entirely lost command over himself. His rapid transitions from hope to fear, from boasting to wailing, his violence to the servant, are alike evidences of internal turmoil. He is completely self-absorbed. In speaking with the doctor of his wife's state, he continually breaks off to consider his own. And in this last stress his tendency to general philosophical reflection becomes more marked. Thus, with consummate art, by leading us to regard Macbeth's fate as part of the general law of things, Shakespeare enables us to extend to him a certain measure of pity, without which the completely tragic effect would be lost. And this is helped by the return of something of his old courage in the actual presence of danger.

1. them, i.e. the "false thanes".

3. taint. Walker weakly suggested faint. But Shakespeare often used a transitive verb intransitively: cf. 'remove' in line 2, and iv. 3. 229, note. 'Taint' is again so used in Twelfth Night, iii. 4. 145.

4. Shakespeare's constant irony appears in the way in which Macbeth dwells on the prophecies just as they are about to betray him.

8. epicures. Holinshed frequently alludes to the introduction into Scotland by Englishmen of 'riotous manners and superfluous gormandizing'. For the phrase cf. Edward III.—

"those ever-bibbing epicures,
Those frothy Dutchmen, puffed with double beer".

9. I sway by, either 'I am directed by' or 'by which I bear rule'.

16. linen cheeks: cf. Henry V. ii. 2. 74, "Their cheeks are paper".

17. Are counsellors to fear, incite others to fear.

20. push is used several times for attack; so Elwin's fantastic explanation of it as "the pushing or passing of a wine cup" is unnecessary. Macbeth only means that all his fortunes are dependent on the present crisis.

21. disease, the reading of all the Ff. but F 1, which reads dis-eate. The reading of the text makes good sense, and is in harmony with 'I am sick at heart'. 'Disease' is simply the converse of 'ease'. But some editors read Will chair me ever or dis-seat me now, which also gives a possible sense. But the Ff. authority is on the whole strongest for the reading I have adopted. Bailey's Will charter me ever or disseize me now is mere ingenuity.

22. way. Macbeth compares the 'way' or course of his life to the progress of the seasons. Johnson suggested May, but it would be quite arbitrary so to alter the text, although the parallel between May and youth is common in Shakespeare.

23. the yellow leaf. Cf. Sonnet lxxiii—

"That time of year thou may'st in me behold
When yellow leaves, or few, or none, do hang Upon those boughs which shake against the cold,
Bare ruin'd choirs, where late the sweet birds sang".

Byron has borrowed the idea in his lines headed On this Day I complete my Thirty-Sixth Year—

"My days are in the yellow leaf;
The flowers and fruits of love are gone;
The worm, the canker, and the grief
Are mine alone".

29. Seyton. "The Setons of Touch were hereditary armour-bearers to the kings of Scotland." (French.)

39. Cure her. So all Ff. but F 1, which has only Cure. In any case it is clear that Macbeth is thinking far more of his own 'mind diseased' than of his wife's.

Singer quotes from Tasso's L'Amadigi, xxxvi. 37—

"Ma chi puote con erbe od argomenti Guarir l' infermita del intelletto?"

('But who with herbs or arguments can cure the infirmity of the mind?')

42. written, and so permanent. Cf. Hamlet, i. 5. 98—

"Yea, from the table of my memory I'll wipe away all trivial fond records";

and, lower down, "the book and volume of my brain".

43. oblivious, causing oblivion. Cf. "the insane root", i. 3. 84, note; and Milton's "the oblivious pool", Paradise Lost, i. 266; "that forgetful lake", id. ii. 74.

44. The repetition of 'stuff'd' and 'stuff' is by no means un-Shakespearian; cf. v. 2. 19 above. Most Elizabethan authors love such jingles, and the fact that they are often unpleasing does not warrant us in removing them. But editors have suggested for stuff'd,—full, foul, fraught, stained, clogged, &c.; and for stuff,—grief, load, slough, freight, &c.

50. cast, the technical term for discovering a disease by the inspection of urine.

55. senna; so F 4. F 1 has cyme, F 2, F 3 caeny; both meaningless. Senna, like rhubarb, was regarded as a purgative or cathartic. Observe that Macbeth uses the same metaphor as Caithness in v. 2. 28.

Another interval may be assumed after this scene.

Scene 4.

The catastrophe of Macbeth's fate begins with the fulfilment of the prediction as to Birnam wood in this scene and is completed by that as to the birth of his destroyer in scene 8. The toils of retribution close quickly round him. The traditions of Elizabethan drama obliged Shakespeare to make an attempt to represent war on the stage, and the only possible method was that of short typical scenes. But, dramatically, these represent a single continuous action.

1. 'Where he is obliged to give them an advantage or opportunity (i.e. in the open field) there his followers revolt.' The lines are rather obscure, but the substitution of taken or gained for given in line 11 does not help much. On the repetition cf. v. 4. 43, note.

12. Both more and less, both small and great; nobles and commons.

14. 'Let us wait to give a correct opinion of the state of things until the real outcome declares itself', i.e. 'let us act and not speculate'; cf. lines 19, 20.

18. owe must be here used in its modern sense, to give an antithesis to 'have'. For the Shakespearian sense of it as 'possess', cf. i. 4. 10; iii. 4. 113.

20. Rhetorically the speech ends with the rhymed couplets. Siward adds a command to the troops in another tone. During this scene there has been a halt for the purpose of cutting branches.

Scene 5.

5. forced, strengthened; Collier absurdly reads farc'd, i.e. 'stuffed', 'filled out'.

6. dareful, here only in Shakespeare.

9. Even as of old, the immediate necessity for action finds Macbeth in his element; it is only the intervals, giving free scope to his imagination, that unman him.

10. cool'd. So Ff. Malone suggested 'coil'd for 'recoiled'; Collier, quailed.

11. Cf. act ii. scene i.

17. I think that this line can only be taken as an expression of Macbeth's callous indifference to everything but his own danger. His wife's death arouses no emotions; it only suggests a general reflection on the transiency of things.

18. such a word, as 'Death'.

19-22. An exact analysis of these lines is impossible, but the general idea, of the vanity of human life and the inevitableness of death, is very plain. Of course this speech is Macbeth's and not Shakespeare's, but it well represents the pessimism, which was a common mood of the poet's, especially in his tragic period, and which finds a place also in the Sonnets. And the vanity of commentators is well shown in Theobald's emendation of dusky for dusty, and Hunter's interpretation of fools as 'foules', i.e. 'crowds'.

24. Another of Shakespeare's favourite metaphors from the stage; cf. i. 3. 128; ii. 4. 5, &c.

42. pull in. Steevens explains this as 'I check the confidence to which I before gave rein'. Johnson proposed pull in, and the Clarendon Press editors pale in.

43. Cf. Banquo's warning in i. 3. 123.

50. the estate o' the world. Cf. the well-known quatrain in Fitzgerald's translation of Omar Khayyám—

"Ah Love! could you and I with Him conspire
To grasp this sorry Scheme of Things entire,
Would we not shatter it to bits,—and then Remould it nearer to the heart's desire?"

Scene 6.

2. uncle, cf. v. 2. 2, note.

4. our first battle, the first division of our army.

7. Do we but find. This may be taken as a conditional clause, or as an instance of the use of a subjunctive to express a wish: cf. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 364.

Scene 7.

It would be a little trite to let Macbeth fall by the hand of Macduff at once; therefore he is allowed to show his bravery first in the vanquishing of young Siward.

2. the course, a technical term in bear-baiting, analogous to a 'round' in boxing, a 'fall' in wrestling, or a 'bout' in fencing. Cf. Lear, iii. 7. 54, "I am tied to the stake, and I must stand the course".

3. Macbeth comforts himself with repeating the words of the second prophecy, though he can only have half believed it in his heart after the failure of the first.

18. either thou, an abbreviated expression for 'either thou shalt meet me'.

20. undeeded. Shakespeare is fond of coining these picturesque negatives, in which the English language is not too rich. Cf. 'disseat' (v. 3. 2). 'Undeeded' exactly corresponds to the Greek ἀπρακτος.

24. gently, without need of an assault.

28, 29. foes That strike beside us. Delius explains this as referring to the thanes who had deserted Macbeth; cf. line 25: the Clarendon Press editors interpret strike beside as 'deliberately miss'.

Scene 8.

1. the Roman fool. Several of the heroes of Shakespeare's Roman plays, Brutus, Cassius, Antony, end their lives by suicide.

4. This is the only touch of real remorse in Macbeth.

9. intrenchant. Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 372, gives several instances of the use of active participles in a passive sense. For the idea cf. Hamlet, i. i. 146, "the air invulnerable", and iv. i. 44, "woundless air".

13. Cf. iv. 3. 142, note.

14. angel, the 'fiend' of v. 5. 43. The word is often used of an evil spirit, cf. the good and bad angels of Sonnet cxliv.

still, constantly.

18. my better part of man, the nobler part of him, his courage.

26. pole. H. Rowe suggests cloth, and Daniel scroll.

34. Exeunt fighting. The Ff. have Enter fighting and Macbeth slain. But the Ff. stage-directions are confused throughout this scene. It is not unlikely, however, that in actual performance Macbeth was killed on the stage.

Retreat. This would be sounded by the trumpets of Macbeth's flying host; the Flourish, by the advancing English.

40. only...but, for the repetition cf. 'or ere' (iv. 3. 173) and see Abbott, Sh. Gr. § 130.

41. confirm'd, proved.

54. stands. No doubt the head was fixed on a pike. Malone added on a pole to the stage-direction of the Ff.

56. thy kingdom's pearl, wealth, ornament. Malone quotes exactly similar uses of the word from Sylvester, Sidney, and Florio. Consequently Rowe's emendation peers is unnecessary. as well as bald.

61. loves: for the plural cf. iii. 1. 122, note.

75. Scone. Cf. ii. 4. 31, note.

APPENDIX A.

SIMON FORMAN.

Simon Forman was a quack and astrologer, who died in 1611, and left, amongst other MSS., a Book of Plaies and Notes thereof, for common Pollicie. This is now in the Bodleian Library (Ashmolean MSS. 208), and has been privately reprinted by Mr. Halliwell-Phillipps. Amongst the plays seen by Forman were Cymbeline, The Winter's Tale, Macbeth, and a play of Richard II. which was not that by Shakespeare. He gives the following account of Macbeth.

"In Macbeth, at the Globe, 1610, the 20th of April, Saturday, there was to be observed first how Macbeth and Banquo two noblemen of Scotland, riding through a wood, there stood before them three women, fairies or nymphs, and saluted Macbeth, saying three times unto him, Hail, Macbeth, king of Codor, for thou shall be a king, but shall beget no kings, &c. Then said Banquo, What, all to Macbeth and nothing to me? Yes, said the nymphs, Hail, to thee, Banquo; thou shall beget kings, yet be no king. And so they departed, and came to the Court of Scotland, to Duncan king of Scots, and it was in the days of Edward the Confessor. And Duncan bade them both kindly welcome, and made Macbeth forthwith Prince of Northumberland, and sent him home to his own castle, and appointed Macbeth to provide for him, for he would sup with him the next day at night, and did so. And Macbeth contrived to kill Duncan, and through the persuasion of his wife did that night murder the king in his own castle, being his guest. And there were many prodigies seen that night and the day before. And when Macbeth had murdered the king, the blood on his hands could not be washed off by any means, nor from his wife's hands, which handled the bloody daggers in hiding them, by which means they became both much amazed and affronted. The murder being known, Duncan's two sons fled, the one to England, the [other to] Wales, to save themselves; they being fled, they were supposed guilty of the murder of their father, which was nothing so. Then was Macbeth crowned king, and then he for fear of Banquo, his old companion, that he should beget kings but be no king himself, he contrived the death of Banquo, and caused him to be murdered on the way as he rode. The next night, being at supper with his noblemen, whom he had bid to a feast, to the which also Banquo should have come, he began to speak of noble Banquo, and to wish that he were there. And as he thus did, standing up to drink a carouse to him, the ghost of Banquo came and sat down in his chair behind him. And he, turning about to sit down again, saw the ghost of Banquo which fronted him so, that he fell in a great passion of fear and fury, uttering many words about his murder, by which, when they heard that Banquo was murdered, they suspected Macbeth. Then Macduff fled to England to the king's son, and so raised an army and came into Scotland, and at Dunsenanyse overthrew Macbeth. In the meantime, while Macduff was in England, Macbeth slew Macduff's wife and children, and after, in the battle, Macduff slew Macbeth. Observe also how Macbeth's queen did rise in the night in her sleep, and walked, and talked and confessed all, and the Doctor noted her words."

The passages printed in italics show either that Forman was an inaccurate observer, or that the play as presented on April 20, 1610, was in several points different from the version which we possess. The statement that Macbeth was created Prince of Northumberland makes one incline towards the former explanation.

APPENDIX B.

THE EDITIONS OF 1673 AND 1674.

These two versions have been confused by editors; but they are quite distinct, and different in character. The edition of 1673 is in the main a reprint, with some inaccuracies, of the First Folio. But it contains, in addition, three songs. One of those is that indicated in the stage-direction to iii. 5. 33. It occurs also in Middleton's The Witch, act iii. sc. 3. There are a few differences between the texts, of no great moment. In The Witch the song runs as follows:—

SONG.

Voice. (Above.) Come away, come away.

Hecate, Hecate, come away!

Hec. I come, I come, I come,
With all the speed I may,
With all the speed I may.
Where's Stadlin?

Voice. (Above.) Here.

Hec. Where's Puckle?

Voice. (Above.) Here;
And Hoppo too, and Hellwain too,
We lack but you, we lack but you;
Come away, make up the count.

Hec. I will but 'noint, and then I mount.

[A spirit like a cat descends.]

Voice. (Above.) There's one comes down to fetch his dues,
A kiss, a coll, a sup of blood;
And why thou stay'st so long
I muse, I muse,

Since the air's so sweet and good.

Hec. O, art thou come?

What news, what news?

Spirit. All goes still to our delight:
 Either come, or else
 Refuse, refuse.

Hec. Now I'm furnished for the flight.
(Going up.) Now I go, now I fly,
 Malkin my sweet spirit and I,
 O what a dainty pleasure 't is
 To ride in the air
 When the moon shines fair,
 And sing and dance, and toy and kiss.
 Over woods, high rocks, and mountains,
 Over seas, our mistress' fountains,
 Over steeples, towers, and turrets,
 We fly by night, 'mongst troops of spirits:
 No ring of bells to our ear-sounds,
 No howls of wolves, no yelps of hounds;
 No, not the noise of water's breach,
 Or cannon's throat our height can reach.

Voices. (Above.) No ring of bells, etc.

The other two songs are introduced for the Witches at the end of act ii. sc. 2, and of act ii. sc. 3, respectively. There is no proof of their authorship, but they may be by Davenant, who seems to have acted as editor to the version published in the next year, 1674.

The title-page of this is as follows:—

Macbeth | A | Tragedy. | With all the | Alterations, | Amendments,
 | Additions, | and | New Songs. | As it's now Acted at the Duke's Theatre | London. | Printed for P. Chetwin, and are to be Sold | by most Booksellers, 1674.

The 'new songs' include the three already printed in 1673, and a fourth, also taken from The Witch, act v. sc. 2, and indicated in the stage-direction to iv. i. 43 of the Folio Macbeth.

Black spirits and white, red spirits and gray,
 Mingle, mingle, mingle, you that mingle may!

Titty, Tiffin,
 Keep it stiff in;
 Firedrake, Puckey,
 Make it lucky;
 Liard, Robin,
 You must bob in.

Round, around, around, about about!
 All ill come running in, all good keep out!

1st Witch. Here's the blood of a bat.

Hec. Put in that, O, put in that!

2nd Witch. Here's libbard's-bane.

Hec. Put in again!

1st Witch. The juice of toad, the oil of adder.

2nd Witch. Those will make the younker madder.

Hec. Put in—there's all—and rid the stench.

Firedrake. Nay, here's three ounces of the red-haired wench.

All the Witches. Round, around, around, etc.

Davenant's "Amendments, Alterations and Additions" amount to an entire recasting of the play. Many of Shakespeare's most characteristic passages are cut out, and replaced by worthless stuff of the adapter's own. It would be mere waste of time to consider these changes more closely. But it is notable that several of the passages omitted by Davenant are exactly those which more recent editors have wished to reject as un-Shakespearian. Such are the episodes of the Porter, of the touching for the evil, of Siward and his son. (Cf. Appendix G.)

APPENDIX C.

SHAKESPEARE'S HISTORICAL AUTHORITY.

The historical incidents of Macbeth are derived by Shakespeare from Raphael Holinshed's Chronicle of Scotland. This was part of a great folio collection of Chronicles and Descriptions of England, Scotland, and Ireland, which Holinshed, with the assistance of William Harrison and Richard Stanihurst, gave to the world in 1578. A second edition, apparently the one used by Shakespeare, was published in 1587.

It has been thought worth while to reprint here the chief passages which served Shakespeare as material for his play. Besides those taken from Holinshed's account of Duncan and Macbeth, there are some belonging to the earlier reign of King Duff and to other parts of the Chronicles. They are arranged, for the convenience of the student, under the scenes which they illustrate.

Act i. sc. 2.

From the Chronicle of King Duncan.

"After Malcolme succeeded his Nephew Duncan, the sonne of his daughter Beatrice: for Malcolme had two daughters, y^e one which was this Beatrice, being giuen in marriage vnto one Abbanath Crinen, a man of great nobilitie, and Thane of the Isles and west partes of Scotlande, bare of that marriage the foresayd Duncan: The other called Doda, was married vnto Synell the Thane of Glamis, by whom she had issue one Makbeth a valiant gentleman, and one that if he had not bene somewhat cruell of nature, might haue bene thought most wortheie the gouernment of a realme. On the other parte, Duncan was so softe and gentle of nature (i. 7. 16) that the people wished the inclinations & maners of these two cousines to haue bene so tempered and enterchaungeably bestowed betwixt them, that where the one had to much of clemencie, and the other of crueltie, the meane vertue betwixt these two extremities, might haue reigned by indifferent particion in them bothe, so shoulde Duncan haue proued a worthy king, and Makbeth an excellent captaine. The beginning of Duncanes reigne was very quiet & peaceable, without any notable trouble, but after it was perceyued how negligent he was in punishing offenders, many misruled persons tooke occasion thereof to trouble the peace and quiet state of the common wealth, by seditious commotions which firste had theyr beginnings in this wise. Banquho the Thane of Lochquhaber, of whom the house of the Stewardes is descended (iv. I. III), the whiche by order of lynage hath nowe for a long time enjoyed the crowne of Scotlande, euen till these our dayes, as he gathered the finaunces due to the king, and further punished somewhat sharpely suche as were notorious offenders, being assayed by a number of rebelles inhabiting in that countrey, and spoyled of the money and all other things, had muche ado to get away with life after he had receyued sundry grieuous woundes amongst them. Yet escaping theyr handes after he was somewhat recouered of his hurtes and was able to ride, he repayred to the courte, where making his complaint to the king in most earnest wise, he purchased at length that the offenders were sente for by a Sergeant at armes (i. 2. 3), to appeare to make aunswere vnto suche mater as shoulde be layde to theyr charge, but they augmenting theyr mischeeuous acte with a more wicked deede, after they had misused the messenger with sundry kindes of reproches, they finally slew him also. Then doubting not but for suche contemptuous demeanour agaynst the kings regall authoritie, they shoulde be inuaded with all the power the king coulde make, Makdowalde one of great estimation amongst them making first a confederacie with his nearest frendes and kinsmen, tooke vpon him to be chiefe captayne of all suche rebelles, as woulde stande against the king, in maintenance of theyr grieuous offences lately committed against him. . . . He vsed also suche subtile perswasions and forged allurements, that in a small time he had got together a mightie power of men: for out of the westerne Isles (i. 2. 12), there came vnto him a great multitude of people, offering themselues to assist him in that rebellious quarell, and out of Ireland in hope of the spoyle came no small number of Kernes & Galloglasses (i. 2. 12) offering gladly to serue vnder him, whither it shoulde please him to lead them. Makdowald thus hauing a mightie puyssance about him, encountred with suche of the kings people as were sent against him into Lochquhabir, and discomfiting them, by fine force tooke theyr captaine Malcolme, and after the end of the batayle smoothe of his head. This ouerthrow beyng notified to the king, did put him in wonderfull feare, by reason of his small skill in warlyke affayres. Calling therfore his nobles to a counsell, willed them of their best aduise for the subduing of Makdowald and other the rebelles. Here in sundry heades (as it euer happeneth) being sundry opinions, whiche they vttered according to euery man his skill, at length Makbeth speaking muche against the kings softnesse, & ouer muche slacknesse in punishing offenders, whereby they had such time to assemble together, he promised notwithstanding, if the charge were committed vnto him and to Banquho, so to order the mater, that the rebelles should be shortly vanquished and quite put downe, and that not so much as one of them shoulde be founde to make resistance within the countrey. And euen so came it to passe: for being sente forth with a newe power, at his entering into Lochquhaber, the fame of his coming put y^e enimies in suche feare, that a great number of them stole secretly away from theyr captaine Makdowald, who neuerthelesse enforced thereto, gaue batayle vnto Makbeth, with the residue whiche remained with him, but being ouercome and fleing for refuge into a castell (within the whiche hys wyfe and chyldren were enclosed,) at length when he saw he coulde neyther defend the hold any longer against his enimies, nor yet vpon surrender be suffered to depart with lyfe saued, he first slew his wife & children, and lastly himselfe, least if he had yeelded simply, he shoulde haue bene executed in most cruell wise for an example to other (i. 4. 3). . . . Thus was iustice and lawe restored againe to the old accustomed course by the diligent meanes of Makbeth. Immediatly wherevpon worde came that Sueno king of Norway was arriued in Fyfe with a puyasant army to subdue the whole realme of Scotland."

Holinshed goes on to relate at length the story of the Danish wars. In the course of these the Scots overcame an army of their foes by the following trick:—

"The Scots herevpon tooke the iuyce of Mekilwort berries (i. 3. 84) & mixed the same in theyr ale and bread, sending it thus spiced and confectioned in great abundance vnto their enimies. They reioysing that they had got meate and drinke sufficient to satisfie theyr bellies, fell to eating and drinking after such greedy wise, that it seemed they stroue who might deuoure & swallow vp most, till the operation of the berries spred in suche sorte through al' the partes of their bodies, that they were in the ende brought into a fast dead sleepe, that in maner it was vnpossible to awake them. Then forthwith Duncane sent vnto Makbeth, commaunding him with all diligence to come and set vpon the enimies, being in easie pointe to be ouercome. Makbeth making no delay came with his people to the place, where his enimies were lodged, & first killing the watche, afterwards entred the campe, and made suche slaughter on all sides without any resistance, that it was a wonderfull mater to behold, for the Danes were so heauy of sleepe, that the most parte of them were slayne & neuer styrred: other that were awakened eyther by the noyse or otherwayes forth, were so amazed and dyzzie headed vpon their wakening, that they were not able to make any defence, so that of the whole numbers there escaped no moe but onely Sueno himselfe and tenne other persons, by whose help he got to his shippes lying at rode in the mouth of Tay."

The close of the wars is described thus—

"To resist these enimies, whiche were already landed, and busie in spoiling the countrey, Makbeth and Banquho were sente with the kings authoritie, who hauing with them a conuenient power, encountered the enimies, slewe parte of them, and chased the other to their shippes. They that escaped and got once to theyr shippes, obtainyd of Makbeth for a great summe of golde, that suche of theyr frendes as were slaine at this last bickering might be buried in Saint Colmes Inche (i. 2. 60). In memorie whereof, many olde Sepulchres are yet in the sayde Inche, there to be seene grauen with the armes of the Danes, as the maner of burying noble men still is, and heretofore hath bene vsed." . . .

Act i. scene 3.

From the Chronicle of King Duff.

This is part of Holinshed's account of the mysterious sickness of that king.

"In the meane time the king fell into a languishing disease (i. 3. 23), not so greuous as strange, for that none of his Phisitions coulde perceyue what to make of it. . . . But about that present time there was a murmuring amongst the people, how the king was vexed with no naturall sicknesse, but by sorcery and Magicall arte, practised by a sort of Witches dwelling in a towne of Murrayland, called Fores. Wherevpon, albeit the Authour of this secrete talke was not knowen, yet being brought to the kings eare, it caused him to sende forthwith certaine wittie persons thither to enquire of the truth. They that were thus sent, dissembling the cause of their iourney, were receyued in the darke of the night into the castell of Fores by the lieutenant of the same, called Donwald, who continuing faithful to the king, had kepte that castell agaynst the rebells to the kings vse. . . . He sent fourth souldiers, about the midst of the night, who breaking into y^e house, found one of the Witches resting vpon a wooden broche an image of waxe at the fire, resembling in ech feature the kings person, made & deuised as is to be thought, by craft & arte of the Deuill: an other of them sat reciting certain wordes of enchantment, & still basted the image with a certaine licour very busily. The souldiers finding them occupied in this wise, tooke them together with the image, & led them into the castell, where being streitly examined for what purpose they went about such maner of enchantment, they answered, to the end to make away y^e king: for as y^e image did wast afore the fire, so did the bodie of the king breake forth in sweate. And as for the wordes of enchantment, they serued to keepe him still waking from sleepe, so that as the waxe euer melted, so did the kings flesh: by which meanes it should haue come to passe, that when y^e waxe were once cleane consumed, the death of the king should immediatly follow. So were they taught by euill sprites, & hyred to worke the feat by the nobles of Murrayland. The standers by that herd such an abhominable tale told by these Witches, streight wayes brake the image, & caused y^e Witches (according as they had well deserued) to bee burnt to death. It was sayd that the king, at the very same time that these things were a doying within the castell of Fores, was deliuered of his languor, and slepte that night without any sweate breaking forth vpon him at all, and the next day being restored to his strength, was able to do any maner of thing that lay in man to do, as though he had not bene sicke before any thing at all."

From the Chronicle of King Duncan.

"Shortly after happened a straunge and vncouth wonder, whiche afterwarde was the cause of much trouble in the realme of Scotlande as ye shall after heare. It fortun'd as Makbeth & Banquho iourned towardes Fores, where the king as then lay, they went sporting by the way together without other companie, saue only themselves, passing through the woodes and fieldes, when sodenly in the middes of a launde, there met them .iij. women in straunge & ferly apparell, resembling creatures of an elder worlde, whom when they attentiuely behelde, wondering much at the sight, The first of them spake and sayde: All hayle Makbeth Thane of Glamis (for he had lately entred into that dignitie and office by the death of his father Synel.) The .ij. of them said: Hayle Makbeth Thane of Cawder: but the third said: All Hayle Makbeth that hereafter shall be king of Scotland. Then Banquho, what maner of women (saith he) are you, that seeme so little fauourable vnto me, where as to my fellow here, besides highe offices, yee assigne also the kingdome, appointyng forth nothing for me at all? Yes sayth the firste of them, wee promise greater benefites vnto thee, than vnto him, for he shall reygne in deede, but with an vnluckie ende: neyther shall he leaue any issue behinde him to succede in his place, where contrarily thou in deede shall not reygne at all, but of thee those shall be borne whiche shall gouerne the Scottishe kingdome by long order of continuall discent. Herewith the foresayde women vanished immediatly out of theyr sight. This was reputed at the first but some vayne fantastical illusion (i. 3. 52) by Makbeth and Banquho, in so muche that Banquho woulde call Makbeth in ieste kyng of Scotland, and Makbeth againe would call him in sporte likewise, the father of many kings. But afterwards the common opinion was, that these women were eyther the weird sisters (i. 3. 32, etc.), that is (as ye would say) y^e Goddesses of destinie, or els some Nymphes or Feiries, endewed with knowledge of prophesie by their Nicromantickall sciencie, because euery thing came to passe as they had spoken. For shortly after, the Thane of Cawder being condemned at Fores of treason against the king committed, his landes, liuings and offices were giuen of the kings liberalitie vnto Makbeth. The same night after, at supper Banquho iested with him and sayde, now Makbeth thou hast obtainned those things which the twoo former sisters prophesied (ii. I. 21), there remaineth onely for thee to purchase that which the third sayd should come to passe. Wherevpon Makbeth reuoluing the thing in his minde, began euen then to deuise howe he mighte attayne to the kingdome: but yet hee thought with himselfe that he must tary a time, whiche shoulde aduance him thereto (by the diuine prouidence (i. 3. 143)) as it had come to passe in his former preferment."

Act i. scene 4.

From the Chronicle of King Duncan.

"But shortly after it chaunced that king Duncane hauing two sonnes by his wife which was the daughter of Sywarde Earle of Northumberland (v. 2. 2), he made the elder of them cleped Malcolme prince of Cumberlande, as it were thereby to appoint him his successor in

APPENDIX C.

the kingdome, immediatly after his deceasse. Makbeth sore troubled herewith, for that he sawe by this meanes his hope sore hindered, (where by the olde lawes of the realme, the ordinance was, that if he that shoulde succede were not of able age to take the charge vpon himselfe, he that was nexte of bloud vnto him, shoulde be admitted) he beganne to take counsell howe he might vsurpe the kingdome by force, hauing a iuste quarell so to do (as he tooke the mater,) for that Duncane did what in him lay to defraude him of all maner of title and clayme, whiche hee mighte in tyme to come, pretende vnto the crowne."

Act i. scene 3 to act ii. scene 4.

From the Chronicle of King Duncan.

"The woordes of the three weird sisters also, (of whome before ye haue heard) greatly encouraged him herevnto, but specially his wife lay sore vpon him to attempt the thing, as she that was very ambitious brenning in vnquenchable desire to beare the name of a Queene.

"At length therefore communicating his purposed intent with his trustie frendes, amongst whom Banguho was the chiefest, vpon confidence of theyr promised ayde (ii. i. 25), he slewe the king at Enuernes, (or as some say at Botgosuane,) in the .vj. yeare of his reygne. Then hauing a companie about him of such as he had made priuie to his enterpryce, he caused himselfe to be proclaymed king, and forthwith went vnto Scone, where by common consent, he receyued the inuesture of the kingdome according to the accustomed maner. The bodie of Duncane was firste conueyed vnto Elgyne, and there buried in kingly wise, but afterwarde it was remoued and conueyed vnto Colmekill, and there layd in a sepulture amongst his predecessours in the yeare after the birth of our Sauour .1040. Malcolme Cammore and Donald Bane the sonnes of king Duncane, for feare of theyr liues (whiche they might well know y^t Makbeth would seeke to bring to end for his more sure confirmation in the estate) fled into Cumberland, where Malcolme remained til time that S. Edward y^e sonne of king Etheldred recouered the dominion of England from the Danish power, the whiche Edward receuyed Malcolme by way of moste frendly entertaynement, but Donald passed ouer into Ireland, where he was tenderly cherished by the king of that lande."

From the Chronicle of King Duff.

"Donewald . . . conceyued suche an inwarde malice towardes the king, (though he shewed it not outwardly at the firste) that the same continued still boyling in his stomake, and ceased not, till through setting on of his wife and in reuenge of suche vnthankfulnessse, he founde meanes to murder the king within the foresayd Castell of Fores where he vsed to sojourne, for the king beyng in that countrey, was accustomed to lie most commonly within the same castel, hauing a special trust in Donewald, as a man whom he neuer sus pected (i. 5. 58): but Donwald not forgetting the reproche whiche h^{is} lineage had susteyned by the execution of those his kinsmen, whome the king for a spectacle to the people had caused to be hanged, could not but shew manifest tokens of great griefe at home amongst his familie: which his wife perceyuing, ceased not to trauaile with him, till she vnderstood what the cause was of his displeasure. Whiche at length when she had learned by his owne relation, she as one that bare no lesse malice in hyr harte towards the king, for the like cause on hyr behalfe than hir husband did for his freendes, counselled him (sith the king oftentimes vsed to lodge in his house without any garde aboute him, other than the garyson of the castell, whiche was wholly at his commaundement) to make him away, and shewed him the meanes whereby he might soonest accomlishe it. Donwalde thus being the more kindled in wrath by the woordes of his wife, determined to follow hyr aduise in the execution of so haynous an acte. Wherevpon deuising with himselfe for a while, whiche way he might best accomlishe his cursed intention, at length he gate oportunitie and sped his purpose as followeth. It chaunced, that the king vpon the day before he purposed to departe forth of the Castell, was long in his oratorie at his prayers, and there continued till it was late in the night, at the last comming forth he called suche afore him, as had faithfully serued him in pursute and apprehention of the rebelles, and giuing them hartie thankes, he bestowed sundry honorable giftes amongst them (ii. i. 14), of the which number Donwald was one, as he that had bene euer accompted a moste faithfull seruaunt to the king. At length hauing talked with them a long time, he got him into his pryue chamber, only with two of his chamberlaynes, who hauing brought him to bedde came forth againe, and then fell to banqueting with Donewald and his wife, who had prepared diuers delicate dishes, and sundry sorts of drinke for theyr arere supper or collation, whereat they sat vp so long, till they had charged theyr stomakes with suche full gorges, that theyr heades were no sooner got to the pyllow, but a sleepe they were so fast, that a man might haue remoued the chamber ouer them, rather than to haue awaked them out of theyr drunken sleepe. Then Donewalde though he abhorred the act greatly in his harte, yet through instigation of his wife, he called foure of his seruants vnto him (whom he had made priuie to his wicked intent before, and framed to his purpose with large giftes) and now declaring vnto them, after what sorte they should worke the feate, they gladly obeyed his instructions, and speedely going about the murder, they enter the chamber (in which the king lay) a litle before cockes crow (3. ii. 26), where they secretly cut his throte as he lay sleeping, without any busking at all: and immediatly by a posterne gate they caried forth the dead body into the fieldes. . . . Donewald aboute the time that the murder was a doing, got him amongst them that kepte the watch, and so continewed in companie with them al the residue of the night. But in the morning when the noyse was reysed in the kings chamber how the king was slaine, his body conueyed away, and the bed all berayed with bloud, he with the watche ran thither as though he had knowen nothing of the mater, and breaking into the chamber, and finding cakes of bloud in the bed & on the floore about the sides of it, he forthwith slewe the chamberlaynes (ii. 3. 89), as giltye of that haynous murder, and then like a madde man running to and fro, hee ransacked euery corner within the castell, as though it had bene to haue seene if he might haue founde either the body or any of ye murtherers hid in any pryue place: but at length comming to the posterne gate, & finding it open, he burdened the chamberlaines whom he had slaine with al the fault, they hauing the keyes of the gates committed to their keeping al the night, and therefore it could not be otherwise (sayde he) but that they were of counsel in the committing of that moste detestable murder. Finally suche was his ouer earnest diligence in the inquisition and triall of the offendours herein, that some of the Lordes began to mislike the mater, and to smell forth shrewed tokens, that he should not be altogether cleare himselfe (iii. 6. 11): but for so much as they were in that country, where hee had the whole rule, what by reason of his frendes and authoritie together, they doubted to vtter what they thought till time and place should better serue therevnto, and herevpon got them away euery man to his home. For the space of .vj. moneths together after this haynous murder thus committed, there appeared no sunne by day, nor Moone by night in any parte of the realme, but stil was the skie covered with continuat cloudes (ii. 4. 7), and sometimes suche outragious windes (ii. 3. 35) arose with lightnings and tempestes, that the people were in great feare of present destruction. . . . Monstrous sightes also that were seene within the Scottishe kingdome that yeare were these, horses in Lothian being of singuler beaultie and swiftnesse, did eate their owne flesh (ii. 4. 14), & would in no wise taste any other meate. In Angus there was a gentlewoman brought forth a childe without eyes, nose, hande, or foote. There was a Sparhawk also strangled by an Owle (ii. 4. 13)."

From the Chronicle of King Kenneth.

Kenneth had slain his nephew and heir. "Thus might he seeme happie to all men, but yet to himselfe he seemed most vnhappie as he that could not but still live in continuall feare, least his wicked practise concerning the death of Malcom Duffe should come to light and knowledge of the world. For so commeth it to passe, that such as are pricked in conscience for anie secret offence committed haue euer an vnquiet mind. And (as the fame goeth) it chanced that a voice was heard as he was in bed in the night time to take his rest (ii. 2. 35), vttering vnto him these or the like wordes in effect: 'Thinke not Kenneth that the wicked slaughter of Malcome Duffe by thee contriued, is kept secret from the knowledge of the eternall God,' etc. . . . The king with this voice being stricken into great dread and terror, passed that night without anie sleepe comming in his eies."

Act iii. scenes 1-3.

From the Chronicle of King Macbeth.

"Makbeth after the departure thus of Duncanes sonnes vsed great liberalitie towards the nobles of the realme, thereby to winne their fauour, & when he saw that no man went about to trouble him, he set his whole intention to maintayne iustice, and to punishe all enormities and abuses, whiche had chaunced through the feeble and slouthfull administration of Duncane. . . . He caused to be slaine sundrie thanes, as of Cathnes, Sutherland, Stranauerne, and Ros, because through them and their soditious attempts, much trouble dailie rose in the realme. . . . These and the like commendable lawes, Makbeth caused to be put as then in vse, gouerning the realme for the space of tenne yeares in equall iustice. But this was but a counterfayte zeale of equitie shewed by him, partely against his naturall inclination to purchase thereby the fauour of the people. "Shortly after, he beganne to shewe what he was, in steede of equitie practising crueltie. For the pricke of conscience (as it chaunceth euer in tyrantes, and sucche as attayne to any astate by vnrightuous meanes) caused him euer to feare, least he should be serued of the same cuppe, as he had ministred to his predecessour. The woordes also of the three weird sisters, wold not out of his mind, which as they promised him the kingdome, so lykewise did they promise it at the same time, vnto the posteritie of Banquho (iii. 1. 58). He willed therefore the same Banquho with his sonne named Fleaunce, to come to a supper that he had prepared for them, which was in deede, as he had deuised, present death at the handes of certaine murderers, whome he hyred to execute that deede, appoynting them to meete with the same Banquho and his sonne without the palayce as they returned to theyr lodgings, and there to slea them, so that he woulde not haue his house slaundered, but that in time to come he might cleare himselfe, if any thing were layde to his charge vpon any suspicion that might arise. It chaunced yet, by the benefite of the darke night, that though the father were slaine, the son yet by the helpe of almightie God reseruing him to better fortune, escaped that daunger, & afterwarde hauing some inckling by the admonition of some frendes which he had in the courte, howe his life was sought no lesse then his fathers, who was slayne not by chaunce medley (as by the handling of the mater Makbeth would haue had it to appeare,) but euen vpon a prepensed deuise, wherevpon to auoyde further perill he fledde into Wales."

Holinshed goes on to trace the descent of the royal family of Scotland from Banquho.

Act iv.

From the Chronicle of King Macbeth.

"But to returne vnto Makbeth, in continuyng the history, and to beginne where I left, ye shal vnderstand, that after the contriued slaughter of Banquho, nothing prospered with the foresayde Makbeth: for in maner euery man began to doubt his owne life, and durst

Macbeth appeare in the kings presence (iii. 6. 32), & euen as there were many that stode in feare of him, so likewise stode he in feare of many, in such sorte that he began to make those away by one surmised caullation or other, whom he thought most able to worke him any displeasure. At length he found suche sweetnesse by putting his nobles thus to death, that his earnest thyrst after bloud in this behalfe, might in nowise be satisfied: for ye must consider he wanne double profite (as he thought) hereby: for firste they were ridde out of the way whome he feared, and then agayne his coffers were enriched by their goodes, whiche were forfeited to his vse, whereby he might the better mainteyne a garde of armed men about him to defend his person from iniurie of them whom he had in any suspicion. Further to the ende he might the more sicklerly oppresse his subiects with all tyranlike wrongs, hee buylded a strong Castell on the top of an high hill cleped Dunsinnane situate in Gowry, ten myles from Perth, on such a proude height, that standing there aloft, a man might behold welneare all the countreys of Angus, Fife, Stermond, & Ernedale, as it were lying vnderneath him. This castell then being founded on the top of that high hill, put the realme to great charges before it was fynished, for al the stuffe necessarie to the building, could not be brought vp without much toyle and businesse. But Makbeth being once determined to haue the worke go forwarde, caused the Thanes of eche shire within the Realme, to come and helpe towards that building, eche man hys course about. At the last when the turne fell vnto Makduffe Thane of Fife to buyld his part, he sent workmen with all needull prouision, and commaunded them to shew suche diligence in euery behalfe, that no occasion might bee giuen for the king to finde fault with him, in that he came not himselfe as other had done, which he refused to do (iii. 5. 40) for doubt least the king bearing him (as he partly vnderstoode) no great good will, woulde lay violent handes vpon him, as he had done vpon dyuerse other. Shortly after, Makbeth comming to behold howe the worke went forwarde, and bycause hee found not Makduffe there, he was sore offended, and sayde, I perceyue this man will neuer obey my commaundements, till he be rydden with a snaffle, but I shall prouide well ynough for him. Neither could he afterwards abide to looke vpon the sayde Makduffe, eyther for that he thought his puissance ouer great, either els for that he had learned of certain wyssardes, in whose wordes he put great confidence, (for that the prophecie had happened so right, whiche the three Fayries or weird sisters had declared vnto him) how that he ought to take heede of Makduffe (iv. 1. 72), who in tymes to come should seeke to destroy him. And surely herevpon had he put Makduffe to death, but that a certaine witch whom he had in great trust, had told that he should neuer be slain with man borne of any woman, nor vanquished till the wood of Bernane, came to the Castell of Dunsinnane. By this prophecie Makbeth put all feare out of his heart, supposing hee might doe what hee would, without any feare to be punished for the same, for by the one prophesie he beleueed it was vnpossible for any man to vanquish him, and by the other vnpossible to slea him. This vaine hope caused him to doe manye outrageous things, to the grievous oppression of his subiects. At length Makduffe to auoyde perill of lyfe, purposed with himselfe to passe into Englande, to procure Malcolme Cammore to clayme the crowne of Scotlande. But this was not so secretly deuised by Makduffe, but that Makbeth had knowledge giuen him thereof, for kings (as is sayde,) haue sharpe sight like vnto Linx, and long eares like vnto Midas. For Makbeth had in euery noble mans house, one slie fellow or other in fee with him (iii. 4. 131), to reueale all that was sayd or done within the same, by which slight he oppressed the moste parte of the Nobles of hys Realme. Immediately then, being aduertised whereabout Makduffe went, he came hastily wyth a great power into Fife, and forthwith besieged the Castell where Makduffe dwelled, trusting to haue found him therein. They that kept the house, without any resistance opened the gates, and suffred him to enter, mistrusting none euill. But neuerthelesse Makbeth most cruelly caused the wife and children of Makduffe, with all other whom he found in that castell, to be slaine. Also he confiscate the goodes of Makduffe, proclaymed him traytor, and confined him out of al the partes of his realme, but Makduffe was alreadie escaped out of daunger and gotten into England vnto Malcolme Canmore, to trie what purchas he might make by meanes of his support to reuenge the slaughter so cruelly executed on his wife, his children, and other friends. At his comming vnto Malcolme, he declared into what great miserie the estate of Scotlande was brought, by the detestable cruelties exercysed by the tyranne Makbeth, hauing committed many horrible slaughters and murders, both as well of the nobles as commons, for the which he was hated right mortally of all his liege people, desiring nothing more than to be deliuered of that intollerable and moste heauie yoke of thraldome, whiche they susteyned at suche a caytifes handes. Malcolme hearing Makduffes words which he vttered in right lamentable sort, for pure compassion and very ruth that pearced his sorowfull hart, bewayling the miserable state of his country, he fetched a deepe sigh, which Makduffe perceyuing, began to fall most earnestly in hande wyth him, to enterprise the deliuering of the Scottishe people out of the hands of so cruell and bloudie a tyrant, as Makbeth by too many plaine experiments did shew himselfe to be, which was an easie matter for him to bring to passe, considering not only the good tytyle he had, but also the earnest desire of the people to haue some occasion ministred, whereby they might be reuenged of those notable iniuries, which they dayly susteyned by the outrageous crueltie of Makbeths misgouernance. Though Malcolme was right sorowfull for the oppression of his Countreyemen the Scottes, in manner as Makduffe had declared, yet doubting whether he were come as one that ment vnfaignedly as hee spake, or else as sent from Makbeth to betray him, he thought to haue some further triall, and therevpon dissembling his minde at the first, he answered as followeth. I am truly right sorie for the miserie chaunced to my Countrey of Scotlande, but though I haue neuer so great affection to relieue y^e same, yet by reason of certaine incurable vyces, which raigne in me, I am nothing meete thereto: First suche immoderate lust and voluptuous sensualitie (the abhominable fountaine of all vyces) (iv. 3. 63) foloweth me, that if I were made king of Scots, I shoulde seeke to deflower your Maydes and matrons in such wise, that mine intemperancie shoulde bee more importable

 (iv. 3. 89) vnto you, than the bloudie tyrannie of Makbeth now is.
 Hereunto Makduffe answered: this surely is a very euill fault, for many noble Princes and Kings haue lost both lyues and King-domes for the same, neuerthelesse there are women ynowe in Scot-lande, and therefore follow my counsell, make thy selfe king, and I shall conuey the matter so wisely, that thou shalt be so satisfied at thy pleasure in suche secrete wise, that no man shall be aware therof. Then saide Malcolme, I am also the moste auaritious creature on the earth, so that if I were king, I should seeke so many wayes to get lands and goodes, that I woulde slea the most part of all the nobles of Scotland by surmised accusations, to the end I might enjoy their lands, goods, and possessions, & therfore to shew you what mischief may ensue on you through mine vnsatiable couetise, I will rehearse vnto you a fable. There was a Foxe hauing a sore place on him ouerset with a swarme of flies that continually sucked out hir bloud, and when one that came by and saw this maner demanded whether she woulde haue the flies dryuen besyde hir, she answered no: For if these flies that are alreadie full, and by reason thereof sucke not very egerly, should be chased away, other that are emptie and felly an hungred, shoulde light in theyr places, and suck out the residue of my bloud farre more to my grieuance than these, which now being satisfied doe not much annoy me. Therefore sayth Malcolme, suffer me to remaine where I am, least if I attaine to the regiment of your realme, mine inquenchable auarice may proue such, that ye would thinke the displeasures which now grieue you, should seeme easie in respect of the vnmeasurable outrage, whiche might ensue through my comming amongst you. Makduffe to this made answer, how it was a farre worse fault than the other, for auarice is the roote (iv. 3.
 85) of all mischief, and for that crime the most part of our kings haue bene slain & brought to their finall ende. Yet notwithstanding follow my counsel, and take vpon thee the crowne, there is golde and riches inough in Scotlande to satisfie thy greedie desire.
 Then sayde Malcolme againe, I am furthermore inclined to dissimulation, telling of leasings and all other kinds of deceyt, so that I naturally reioyce in nothing so muche as to betray and deceyue suche, as put any trust or confidence in my wordes. Then sith there is nothing that more becommeth a prince than constancie, veritie, truth, and iustice, with the other laudable fellowship of those faire and noble vertues which are comprehended onely in soothfastnesse, & that lying vtterly ouerthroweth y^e same, you see how vnable I am to gouerne any prouince or region: and therefore sith you haue remedies to cloke and hide al the rest of my other vices, I pray you find shift to cloke this vice amongst the residue. Then sayd Makduffe: this yet is the worst of all, and there I leaue thee, and therefore say, oh ye vnhappy & miserable Scottishmen, which are thus scourged with so many and sundrie calamities, eche one aboue other. Ye haue one cursed and wicked tyrant that nowe raignes ouer you, without any right or tittle, oppressing you with his most bloudie crueltie: This other that hath the right to the crowne, is so replete with the inconstant behaiour and manifest vices of English men, that he is nothing worthie to enioy it: for by his owne confession he is not onely auaritious, and giuen to vnsatiable lust, but so false a traytour withall, that no trust is to be had to any worde he speaketh. Aduē Scotlande, for now I account my selfe a banished man for euer without comfort or consolation; and with those words the teares trickled down his cheekes right abundantly. At the last when hee was readie to depart, Malcolme tooke him by the sleeue, and sayde, Be of good comfort Makduffe, for I haue none of these vices before remembred, but haue iested with thee in this maner, only to proue thy mind: for diuerse tymes heretofore, hath Makbeth sought by this maner of meanes to bring me into his handes, but the more slow I haue shewed my self to condescend to thy motion and request, the more diligence shall I vse in accomplishing the same. Incontinently hereupon they embraced eche other, and promising to bee faythfull the one to the other, they fell in consultation, nowe they might best prouide for al their businesse, to bring the same to good effect. Soone after Makduffe repaying to the borders of Scotlande, addressed his letters with secret dispatch vnto the nobles of the realme, declaring howe Malcolme was confederate wyth him, to come hastily into Scotlande to clayme the crowne, and therefore he requyred them, sith he was right inheritor thereto, to assist him with their powers to recouer the same out of the hands of the wrongfull vsurper. In the meane time, Malcolme purchased such fauour at king Edwards handes, that old Sywarde Earle of Northumberlande, was appoynted with ten thousande men to go with him into Scotland, to support him in this enterprise, for recouerie of his right."

From the Chronicle of King Edward the Confessor (Chronicles of England).

"As hath bin thought he was enspired with the gift of Prophecie, and also to haue hadde the gift of healing infirmities and diseases. Namely, he vied to help those that were vexed with the disease, commonly called the Kyng's evill, and left that vertue as it were a portion of inheritance vnto his successors the Kynys of this Realme."

Act v. scenes 2-8.

From the Chronicle of King Macbeth.

"After these newes were spred abroad in Scotland, the nobles drew into two seuerall factions, the one taking part with Makbeth, and the other with Malcolme. Hereupon ensued oftentimes sundrie bickerings, and diuerse light skirmishes, for those that were of Malcolmes side, woulde not ieopardie to ioine with their enimies in a pight field, tyll his comming out of England to their support. But after that Makbeth perceiued his enimies power to encrease, by suche ayde as came to them forth of England with his aduersarie Malcolme, he reculed backe into Fife, there purposing to abide in campe fortified, at the Castell of Dunsinane, and to fight with his enimies, if they ment to pursue him, howbeit some of his friends aduysed him, that it should be best for him, eyther to make some agreement with Malcolme, or else to flee with all speed into the Iles, and to take his treasure with him, to the ende he might wage sundrie great Princes of the realme to take his part, and retayne straungers, in whom he might better trust than in his owne subiectes, which stale dayly from him: but he had suche confidence in his prophecies, that he beleued he shoulde neuer be vanquished, till Byrnane wood were brought to Dunsinnane, nor yet to be slaine with anye man, that should be or was borne of any woman. Malcolme following hastily after Makbeth, came the night before the battaile vnto Byrnan wood, and when his armie had rested a while there to refreshe them, hee commaunded euerye man to get a bough of some tree or other of that wood in his hand, as bigge as he might beare, and to march forth therewith in such wise, that on the next morow they might come closely and without sight in thys manner within viewe of hys enimies. On the morow when Makbeth beheld them comming in this sort, hee first marueyled what the matter ment, but in the end remembered himselfe, that the prophecie which he had hearde long before that time, of the comming of Byrnane wood to Dunsinnane Castell, was likely to bee now fulfilled. Neuerthelesse, he brought his men in order of battell, and exhorted them to doe valiantly, howbeit his enimies had scarcely cast from them their boughes, when Makbeth perceiuing their numbers betook him streight to flight, whom Makduffe pursued with great hatred euen till he came vnto Lunfannain, where Makbeth perceiuing that Makduffe was hard at his back, leapt beside his horse, saying, thou traytor, what meaneth it that thou shouldest thus in vaine follow me that am not appoynted to be slain by any creature that is borne of a woman, come on therefore, and receyue thy rewarde which thou hast deserued for thy paynes, and therewithall he lyfted vp his sworde thinking to haue slaine him. But Makduffe quickly auoyding from his horse, ere he came at him, answered (with his naked sworde in his hande) saying: it is true Makbeth, and now shall thine insatiable crueltie haue an ende, for I am euen he that thy wysards haue tolde the of, who was neuer borne of my mother, but ripped out of hir wombe: therewithall he stept vnto him, & slue him in the place. Then cutting his heade from the shoulders, hee set it vpon a poll, and brought it vnto Malcolme. This was the end of Makbeth, after he had reigned .xviij. yeares ouer the Scottishmen. In the beginning of his raigne he accomplished many worthe actes, right profitable to the common wealth, (as ye haue heard) but afterward by illusion of the diuell (v. 8. 19), he defamed the same with most terrible crueltye. He was slaine in the yeare of the incarnation 1057. and in the .xvj. yeare of king Edwardes raigne ouer the English men. Malcolme Cammore thus recouering the realme (as ye haue hearde) by support of king Edward, in the .xvj. yeare of the same Edwards raign, he was crowned at Scone the .xxv. day of April, in the yeare of our Lorde. 1057. Immediately after his coronation, he called a Parliament at Forfair, in the which he rewarded them with landes and liuings that had assisted him agaynst Makbeth, aduancing them to fees and offices as he saw cause, and commaunded that specially those that bare the surname of any office or landes, shoulde haue and enioye the same. He created many Earles, Lordes, Barons, and Knights. Many of them that before were Thaness, were at this time made Earles, as Fife, Menteth, Atholl, Leuenox, Murray, Cathnes, Rosse, and Angus. These were the first Earles that haue beene heard of amongst the Scottishe men (v. 8. 62) (as their hystories make mention)."

From the Chronicle of King Edward the Confessor.

"About the thirteenth yeare of King Edwardes raigne (as some write,) or rather about the nineteenth or twentieth yere as should appeare by the Scottishe Writers, Siward the noble Earle of Northumberland with a great power of Horsemenne went into Scotland, and in battell put to flight Mackbeth that had vsurped the Crowne of Scotland, and that done, placed Malcolme surnamed Camoyr, the son of Duncane, sometime King of Scotlande, in the gouernement of that Realme, who afterward slew the sayd Macbeth, and then reigned in quiet. Some of our Englishe writers say, that this Malcolme was K. of Cumberlande, but other reporte him to be sonne to the K. of Cumberland. But heere is to be noted, that if Mackbeth reigned till the yere .1061. and was then slayne by Malcolme, Earle Siward was not at that battaile, for as our writers do testifie, he died in the yere .1055. whiche was in the yeare next after (as the same writers affirme) that hee vanquished Mackbeth in fight, & slew many thousands of Scottes, & all those Normans which as ye haue heard, were withdrawn into Scotlande, when they were driuen out of England. It is recorded also, that in the foresaid battaile, in which Earle Siward vanquished the Scottes, one of Siwards sonnes chaunced to be slayne, whereof, though the father had good cause to be sorrowfull, yet when he heard that he dyed of a wound which hee had receyued in fighting stoutely in the forepart of his body, and that with his face toward the enimie, hee greatly reioyced thereat, to heare that he died so manfully (v. 8. 46). But here is to be noted, y^t not now, but a little before, (as Henry Hunt. saith,) y^e Earle Siward, wente into Scotlande himselfe in person, hee sent his sonne with an army to conquire y^t land, whose hap was ther to be slaine: and when his father heard y^e newes, he demaunded whether he receiued the wound wherof he died, in y^e fore parte of the body, or in the under part: and when it was tolde him yt he receyued it in the foreparte, I reioyce (saith he) euen with all my harte, for I woulde not wishe eyther to my sonne nor to my selfe, any other kind of death" (v. 8. 48).

APPENDIX D.

WITCHCRAFT IN THE AGE OF SHAKESPEARE.

The belief in evil spirits, and in the power of witches to do harm by their aid, was wide-spread both amongst Catholics and Protestants in the 16th and 17th centuries. Allusions to it are frequent in literature. Statutes were constantly passed against sorcery, and there are many accounts of the trials of persons suspected of the practice. The most interesting contemporary books on the subject are Harsnet's Declaration of Egregious Popish Impostures (1603); and Reginald Scot's Discoverie of Witchcraft (1584, recently edited by Dr. Brinsley Nicholson). Harsnet's tract is an enquiry into certain cases of demoniacal possession alleged to have been cured by Parsons, the Jesuit: Scot's is a noteworthy attack upon the whole superstition, and is crammed with curious magical lore. It is said to have been publicly burnt, and was reprinted in 1651. Shakespeare seems to have borrowed learning from Harsnet for King Lear, and possibly from Scot for Macbeth. He must also have had in mind a group of cases of alleged witchcraft which took place in Scotland in 1590. These are distinguished from the English cases by the importance which the power claimed for the witches of ruling the elements assumed in them (cf. i. i. 11, sqq.; iv. i. 52, sqq.). In 1589 the royal fleet in which James VI. was bringing home his bride, Anne of Denmark, was dispersed by a sudden and violent storm. James, always intensely superstitious, became convinced that this storm was due to supernatural influence, and in the next year commenced a vigorous campaign against witches. In the course of this the charge of raising tempests and wrecking ships recurred again and again. The Scottish witches, also, unlike the English, appear to have been in the habit of going to sea in sieves (cf. i. 3. 8). A full account of these proceedings may be found in a pamphlet called News from Scotland, declaring the damnable life of Doctor Fian, a notable Sorcerer, &c., 1597. Eight years later (1599) James published his Demonologie, which was intended largely as a counterblast to the scepticism of Reginald Scot. He came to the English throne in 1603, and in 1604 passed a new statute to suppress witchcraft. This may well have recalled public attention to the matter, and suggested to Shakespeare the production or revival of Macbeth.

APPENDIX E.

ON THE WITCH-SCENES.

The passages which I believe to have been interpolated into Shakespeare's work by a later hand are three: act iii. sc. 5; act iv. sc. 1, lines 39-43; and act iv. sc. 1, lines 125-132. These are distinguished from the genuine witch-scenes by—

i. The introduction of a superfluous character, Hecate, who takes no real part in the action of the play.

ii. A metre which is mainly iambic, whereas that of Shakespeare's undoubted witch-scenes is, as a rule, trochaic.

iii. A lyrical element alien to the original conception of the witches. One can hardly imagine the awful beings, who meet Macbeth and Banquo on the blasted heath, singing little songs and dancing 'like elves and fairies'.

iv. Certain prettinesses of fancy, which are much more like Middleton than Shakespeare. See e.g. iii. 5. 23, 34.

With these exceptions the witch-scenes are harmonious in character, and strictly in keeping with the weird temper of the whole play. I cannot, therefore, agree with Mr. Fleay in attributing also to Middleton act i. sc. 1, and act i. sc. 3, lines 1-37; nor do I think there is sufficient evidence to decide for or against his hypothesis that the apparition speeches in act iv. sc. 1 and lines 92-103 of the same scene have been 'worked over'.

Mr. Fleay has a further theory as to the witch-scenes which demands a brief consideration. It is that the supernatural beings in act i. sc. 3 and those in act iv. sc. 1 were not meant by Shakespeare to be identical. In the heath scene he introduces 'weird sisters' proper, three 'fates' or 'destinies' akin to the Scandinavian Norns or goddesses of past, present, and future. These in the cavern scene are replaced by three beings of quite a different type, the ordinary vulgar witches of Elizabethan popular belief. Mr. Fleay argues¹—

(i) Holinshed speaks of Macbeth and Banquo as originally greeted by three "weird sisters, that is, as ye would say, the goddesses of destiny, or else some nymphs or fairies". (See Appendix C.) Forman also calls them "women-fairies or nymphs". (Appendix C.) These terms, 'weird', 'nymph', 'fairy', are usual terms in Elizabethan literature for such Fate-goddesses. At a later period Holinshed speaks of Macbeth as listening to "witches" and "wizards", and it is these, quite distinct from the "weird sisters", who are represented in act iv. sc. 1.

(ii) The characteristics of the two types are different. It is the Norns who can 'look into the seeds of time', and prophesy of what is to come. Mere witches have no such power. On the other hand, it is the witches, and not the Norns, who use magical charms and incantations.

(iii) This view gives an explanation of the curious stage-direction in iv. i. 38, Enter Hecate with the other three witches. (See notes ad loc.)

Mr. Fleay admits that in iii. 4. 133 and in iv. i. 136 Macbeth speaks of the later witches as "the weird sisters". This, he somewhat tentatively suggests, may be due to a corrupt text.

Several considerations seem to be fatal to Mr. Fleay's theory.

(a) It implies the rejection of certain passages—i. i. 3. 1-37, and iv. i. 130, sqq., which on all other grounds may well be thought genuine.

(b) It is most unlikely that the distinction between Norns and witches, which we, with our modern knowledge of comparative mythology can make, would have been appreciated by Shakespeare and his audience. They would quite naturally identify the two.

(c) Mr. Spalding¹ has conclusively shown that what Mr. Fleay regards as the special note of the Norns, the power to see into the future, is among the common accusations made in witch trials. He also quotes instances of the use of "wayward" (= "weird") and "sisters", as applied to witches.

APPENDIX F.

ON THE PORTER SCENE: ACT II. SC. 3.

Coleridge was one of the most helpful and suggestive of Shakespearean critics. A poet himself, he had a genuine insight into the workings of another poet's mind. But he had not the scholarly temper, and his speculations were often brilliant rather than sane. So that his judgments upon disputed points are apt to need some reconsidering.

Speaking of Macbeth, act ii. sc. 3, Coleridge says²: "This low soliloquy of the Porter and his few speeches afterwards I believe to have been written for the mob by some other hand, perhaps with Shakespeare's consent; and that finding it take, he, with the remaining ink of a pen otherwise employed, just interpolated the words—

'I'll devil-porter it no further: I had thought to have let in some of all professions, that go the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire'.

Of the rest not one syllable has the ever-present being of Shakespeare".

The Clarendon Press editors, following Coleridge, attribute this passage, amongst others, to the hand of Middleton. Such a view appears to me undoubtedly wrong, and it is of some importance to the right understanding of Shakespeare's dramatic methods to see why it is wrong. A complete survey of the whole question is given by Mr. J. W. Hales in his Notes and Essays on Shakespeare, and the following argument is largely condensed from his.

² Shakespeare Notes and Lectures.

The scene itself—the knocking at the gate, and the consequent entry of the porter—is an essential part of the design of the play. It follows without a break upon the preceding scene (cf. act ii. sc. 1, lines 57, 65, 69, 74); and the ‘knocking’ is again alluded to in act v. sc. 1, line 65. Moreover, it is dramatically effective. This will be obvious to anyone who has seen the play upon the stage, and it is inimitably put by De Quincey¹—

“From my boyish days”, he says, “I had always felt a great perplexity on one point in Macbeth. It was this: the knocking at the gate, which succeeds to the murder of Duncan, produced to my feelings an effect for which I never could account. The effect was, that it reflected back upon the murderer a peculiar awfulness and a depth of solemnity; yet however obstinately I endeavoured with my understanding to comprehend this, for many years I never could see why it should produce such an effect.”

De Quincey proceeds to show that the object of the poet was to “throw the interest on the murderer”, to give the audience a comprehension of the hell within him. He then explains that all action in any direction is best measured by reaction.

“Now apply this to the case in Macbeth. Here, as I have said, the retiring of the human heart, and the entrance of the fiendish heart was to be expressed and made sensible. Another world has stepped in, and the murderers are taken out of the region of human things, human purposes, human desires. They are transfigured. Lady Macbeth is ‘unsexed’; Macbeth has forgot that he was born of woman; both are conformed to the image of devils; and the world of devils is suddenly revealed. But how shall this be conveyed and made palpable? In order that a new world may step in, this world must for a time disappear. The murderers and the murder must be insulated—cut off by an immeasurable gulf from the ordinary tide and succession of human affairs—locked up and sequestered in some deep recess; we must be made sensible that the world of ordinary life is suddenly arrested—laid asleep—tranced—racked into a dread armistice; time must be annihilated; relation to things without abolished; and all must pass self-withdrawn into a deep syncope and suspension of earthly passion. Hence it is that when the deed is done, when the work of darkness is perfect, then the world of darkness passes away like a pageantry in the clouds; the knocking at the gate is heard; and it makes known audibly that the reaction has commenced; the human has made its reflex upon the fiendish; the pulses of life are beginning to beat again; and the re-establishment of the goings-on of the world in which we live first makes us profoundly sensible of the awful parenthesis that had suspended them."

Given the entry of the Porter, it is natural that some speech should be put in his mouth. But is the speech that we find in the folio text one suitable to the occasion, such as we can conceive Shakespeare to have written? I think that it is. Of course it is deliberately put on a lower emotional plane from what precedes and follows; that, indeed, is sufficiently marked by the use of prose; it is in direct contrast to the tragic intensity of the murder and its detection. But is not such emotional contrast precisely characteristic of Shakespeare's tragic method? Do we not find it in Lear, in Hamlet, everywhere? Is it not of the very essence of his tragi-comedies? It is to Aeschylus or to Webster that we must go for undiluted tragedy. Shakespeare and the Romantic dramatists generally always give us comedy and tragedy mixed. There are two reasons for this. In the first place, by the ordinary law of contrast, the juxtaposition of comedy makes the tragedy itself more real, more poignant, just as diamonds are more bright in a silver setting. And secondly, it is the aim of the Elizabethan drama to represent human life, the whole of life, with all its incongruous medley of high and low, of light and dark, of laughter and tears. So that the introduction of this speech cannot be said to be unlike Shakespeare, or alien to his usual methods. Nor is it irrelevant in its place; for after all it but repeats, in a lower key, the dominant note of the whole situation. This is the gate of hell—unwittingly, while he slept, the porter has become a devil-porter; and 'the other devil', could not one fancy that to be Macbeth himself?

As to the style of the speech, Mr. Hales conclusively shows it to be quite Shakespearian. The use of 'old', the phrase 'devil-porter it', the conception of an infernal janitor, the manner of the dialogue with Macduff, all of these can be easily paralleled.¹ Even Coleridge had to make an exception to his theory in favour of the bit about 'the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire'—an exception fantastic in itself, and quite fatal to the Clarendon Press idea that Middleton was the author of the passage.

APPENDIX G.

ON VARIOUS SUSPECTED PASSAGES.

I accept the general contention of the Clarendon Press editors and of Mr. Fleay that this play has been rehandled, and in part at least, by Middleton. But I am very sceptical about some of the passages which they have condemned. Arguments which depend upon a sense of style are to a certain extent legitimate in criticism, but after all they are unverifiable; they can hardly be safely applied to single lines, and the conclusions derived from them should always be held as merely probable. I cannot think that these critics have always observed a decent caution in this respect. It is worth while to consider the passages in question under various heads.

i. The Witch Scenes.—The Clarendon Press editors reject i. 3. 1-37; iii. 5; and iv. 1. 39-47, 125-132. Mr. Fleay adds i. 1; iv. 1. 71-2, 79-81, 89-92, 92-103, and as a corollary, iii. 4. 130-144. These have been already discussed in Appendix E.

ii. The Porter Scene.—The Clarendon Press editors reject ii. 3. 1-46. Mr. Fleay does not. This has been already discussed in Appendix F.

iii. The Sergeant Scene.—The Clarendon Press editors reject i. 2, and say: "Making all allowance for corruption of text, the slovenly metre is not like Shakespeare's work, even when he is most careless. The bombastic phraseology of the sergeant is not like Shakespeare's language even when he is most bombastic. What is said of the thane of Cawdor, lines 52, 53, is inconsistent with what follows in scene 3, lines 72, 73, and 112 sqq. We may add that Shakespeare's good sense would hardly have tolerated the absurdity of sending a severely wounded soldier to carry the news of victory."

The only serious points here seem to be (a) the 'slovenly metre' and (b) the 'inconsistencies'. (a) Lines 3, 5, 7, 34, 37, 41, 45, 64, 66 may be explained as instances of ordinary metrical irregularities, though it must be admitted they come rather thick and fast in this scene (cf. notes ad loc. and Essay on Metre, § 5 (iii)). But some of them may also be due to the shortening of the scene for stage purposes, and to this also I should attribute lines 20 and 51 (cf. Introduction, p. 8).

(b) This is a real difficulty and I cannot entirely explain it. But Macbeth, on the field of battle, may not have known, as Ross did, of Cawdor's treachery. So that the only absolute inconsistency is between Angus' speech, lines 109-116, and the general drift of sc. 2. And even here I think the confusion is more likely to be due to compression than to interpolation. For instance—in sc. 2, lines 62-66 may have replaced a much longer passage, in which Cawdor 'confessed' his treason, and was condemned. Angus may have entered at the close of that, and have been sent with Ross to Macbeth, without knowing exactly what Cawdor's crime was. I have seen an absurd book¹ by a Canadian schoolmaster, in which an attempt is made to show that Cawdor was innocent, and that Ross was a creature of Macbeth's, who had slandered Cawdor to Duncan, and then fooled Angus with a false version of the matter!

iv. Rhyme-tags.—The Clarendon Press editors reject ii. 1. 61. Mr. Fleay adds i. 4. 48-53; ii. 3. 127-8, 4. 37-8, 40-1; iv. 1. 153-4;

v. 1. 76-7, 2. 29-30, 3. 61-2, 4. 19-20, 6. 9-10. I have no doubt that rhymed closes to speeches and scenes were often introduced to please the actors, but may they not have been written by Shakespeare himself for that purpose? Moreover I cannot see why these particular tags should be taken away and others left. They are not all particularly feeble (e.g. i. 4. 48-53) or un-Shakespearian (e.g. v. 2. 152-4. cf. note), nor is Shakespeare quite incapable of writing a feeble line at times.

v. Miscellaneous passages.—The Clarendon Press editors reject—

(a) iv. 3. 140-159—the ‘king’s evil’ scene. These lines, they say, “were probably interpolated previous to a representation at Court”. The judgment seems to me perfectly arbitrary, and it is very likely that the play was originally written for a ‘representation at Court’. (Cf. Introduction, p. 10.)

(b) v. 2, about which they “have doubts”. But the scene is wanted as a pendant to sc. 3, and to show the feeling of Scotland towards Macbeth. The language is exceedingly Shakespearian.

(c) v. 5. 47-50, which they call “singularly weak” and “an unskilful imitation of other passages”. The line “I ’gin to be aweary of the sun” does not strike me as at all “singularly weak”.

(d) v. 8. 32-3—

‘Before my body
I throw my warlike shield’.

They think that these words are also ‘interpolated’. But surely no critic can seriously persuade himself that he has a sense of style delicate enough to determine whether they are Shakespeare’s or not.

(e) v. 8. 35-75—the relation of young Siward’s death and crowning of Malcolm. Here they say, “The double stage direction. ‘Exeunt fighting’—‘Enter fighting, and Macbeth slaine’, proves that some alteration had been made in the conclusion of the piece. Shakespeare, who has inspired his audience with pity for Lady Macbeth, and made them feel that her guilt has been almost absolved by the terrible retribution which followed, would not have disturbed this feeling by calling her a ‘fiend-like queen’; nor would he have drawn away the veil which with his fine tact he had dropt over her fate, by telling us that she had taken off her life ‘by self and violent hands’.”

Here I need only note that the double stage-direction only points to some rearrangement of the fighting-scenes which immediately precede, a thing very likely in view of stage-requirements; that a priori arguments as to what Shakespeare would have or would not have done are very untrustworthy; that, to me at least, there seems to be a final touch of irony in the contrast between Lady Macbeth as Malcolm thought of her, and Lady Macbeth as we know her; that the Siward episode follows naturally on sc. 7; and that the way of winding up the play is very like that adopted also in Hamlet.

On the whole I think that the Clarendon Press editors were well advised in their determination to eschew ‘signpost’ (i.e. ‘aesthetic’) criticism, and devote themselves to the linguistic and grammatical illustration of Shakespeare's plays.

(f) Mr. Fleay adds iii. 4. 130-144, partly because it interferes with his theory of the two sets of witches, partly because of 'poverty of thought', a 'long tag', and 'marks of inferior work'. I fancy that no one who does not hold Mr. Fleay's peculiar witch-theory will share his objections to this passage. I should perhaps add that I believe Mr. Fleay has modified his published views on Macbeth.

ESSAY ON METRE.¹

§ 1. Metre as an indication of Date.

English blank verse did not come into use till the sixteenth century; and at the commencement of its career, the rules which regulated its employment were strict. It was only when the instrument was becoming familiar that experiments could be ventured upon, and variations and modifications freely introduced. The changes in the structure of blank verse between the time when Shakespeare commenced writing and the time of his retirement are great; and the variations in this respect are among the most important indications of the date of any given play. That is to say, broadly speaking, the less strictly regular the metre, the later the play.

In the same way, a gradually increasing disregard of other kindred conventions marks the later plays as compared with the earlier. A good deal of rhyme survives in the dialogue in the earlier plays; later it is only to be found occasionally at the close of a scene or a speech to round it off—probably a concession to stage tradition analogous to the similar use of ‘gnomae’ in Greek plays, and of a ‘sentiment’ in modern melodrama. The first use of prose is only for purposes of comedy; later, it is used with comparative freedom (as in Hamlet) in passages of a very different type, though the introduction of verse in a prose scene always marks a rise to a higher emotional plane.

In the present play, the general characteristics of the metre appear to be those of Shakespeare’s middle period; but there are an unusual number of irregularities, some of which may be due to the imperfect condition in which the text has reached us. Rhymed decasyllables at the close of a scene or a speech are frequent. Prose is used for emotional relief in ii. 3 and iv. 2; for a letter in i. 5, and for the sleep-walking scene in v. 1. The witch-passages are in short rhyming measures, mainly ‘trochaic’ in Shakespeare’s part, ‘iambic’ in Middleton’s.

§ 2. Form of Blank Verse.

Our study of versification is commonly restricted to that of Latin and Greek. When we examine English verse-structure, a distinction at once appears. In the classical verse the governing element is quantity; in English it is stress. And inasmuch as stress is much less definite than quantity, the rules of English verse cannot be given with the same precision as those of Latin and Greek. But we may begin with certain explanations as to what stress is not. A ‘stressed’ syllable is not the same as a long syllable; nor is stress the same as sense-emphasis. Any strong or prolonged dwelling of the voice on a syllable, for whatever reason, is stress. So, while a syllable must be either long or short, there are many shades of gradation between the unstressed and the strongly stressed. And as in Greek tragic verse a long syllable may, in certain positions, take the place of a short one, so a moderately stressed syllable may often in English take the place of an unstressed one.

To start with, then,—to get at the basis of our metre—we will take no account of weak stress, but treat of all syllables as if they must either have no stress or a strong stress; and throughout, the word stress, when used without a qualifying adjective, will mean strong stress. The acute accent (') will be used to mark a stress, the grave (˘) to mark a weak stress, the ˘ to mark a syllable sounded but not stressed.

The primary form of the Shakespearian line is—five feet, each of two syllables; each foot carrying one stress, on the second syllable; with a sense pause at the end of the line.

Aroint' | thee, witch'! | the rump' | fed ron' | yon cries' (i. 3. 6).

Though bla' | ded corn' | be lodged' | and trees' | blown down' (iv. 1. 55)

§ 3. Normal Variations.

But if there were no variations on this, the effect would be monotonous and mechanical after a very few lines.

(i) The first variation therefore is brought about by the stress in one or two of the feet being thrown on the first instead of the second syllable, which is known as an 'inverted' stress.

1st foot. Dou'bly | redou' | bled strokes' | upon' | the foe' (i. 2. 38).

2nd foot. Ay' and | since' too | mur'ders | have been' | perform'd' (iii. 1. 77).

3rd foot. His sil' | ver skin' | laced' with | his gol' | den | blood' (ii. 3. 94).

4th foot. And fan' | our peo' | ple cold'. | Nor'way | himself' (i. 2. 50).

5th foot. The great' | doom's' im | age'— | Mal'colm, | Ban'quo (ii. 3. 59).

In the following the stress is inverted in every foot—

Told' by an | i'diot, | full' of | sound' and | fu'ry (v. 5. 27).

Cf. also iii. 1. 102. Observe that the stress is thus thrown back much more commonly in the first foot of the line than elsewhere: and that in the other cases the stressed syllable usually follows a pause.

(ii) Secondly, variety is introduced by the insertion of an extra unstressed syllable which is not extra-metrical, analogous to the use of an anapaest instead of an iambus.

1st foot. Whāt ā haste' | looks through' | his eyes'! | So should' | he' look
(i. 2. 46).

2nd foot. Thoughts spe' | cūlātive' | their un' | sure hopes' | relate' (v. 4. 19).

3rd foot. The mul' | titu' | dīnoūs seas' | incar' | nadine' (ii. 2. 62).

4th foot. I'll be' | myself' | the har' | bīngēr and' | make joy'(ful) (i. 4. 45).

5th foot. Scarf' up | the ten' | der eye' | of pi' | tīfūl day' (iii. 2. 47).

Sometimes two such feet occur in a single line.

That look' | not like' | thẽ inha' | bitants' | ō thẽ earth' (i. 3. 41).

As a general rule, however, such extra syllables are very slightly pronounced; not altogether omitted but slurred, as very often happens when two vowels come next each other, or are separated only by a liquid (see § 6).

(iii) The converse of this is the (very rare) omission of an unstressed syllable. This is only found where the stress is very strong, or when the omission is really made up for by a pause.

In drops' | of sor'(row). | Sons'—, | kins'men | thanes'— (i. 4. 35).
The great' | doom's' im | age'— | Mal'colm | Ban'quo (ii. 3. 59).

(iv) Extra-metrical unstressed syllables are added after a pause, sometimes after the second foot, rarely after the third.

More frequently an extra-metrical syllable comes at the end of a line, and this is common in this play. It is only in quite early plays that it is at all unusual, only in the later ones that it is the normal rhythm.

The thane' | of Caw'(dor) | began' | a dis' | mal con'(flict) (i. 2. 53).
It is' | a ban' | quet' to (me). | Let's' af | ter him' (i. 4. 56).
To plague' | thẽ invent'(or), | this e' | ven-hand' | ed just'(ice) (i. 7. 10).

By an extension of this practice we sometimes have two such extra-metrical syllables.

And take' | my milk' | for gall' | you mur' | dēring min'(isters) (i. 6. 46).

The increasing frequency of extra-metrical syllables is a useful approximate guide to the date of a play. But they are never so frequent in Shakespeare as in some of the younger dramatists.

(v) The variation which perhaps most of all characterizes the later plays is the disappearance of the sense-pause at the end of the line. At first, a clause running over from one line to the next is very rare; in the last plays, it is extremely common. (The presence of a sense-pause is not necessarily marked by a stop; it is sufficient for the purpose that the last word should be dwelt on; the pause may be merely rhetorical, not grammatical.) The proportion of overflow to end-stopped lines in Macbeth is considerable.

§ 4. Weak Stresses.

The basis of scansion being thus settled, we may observe how the rules are modified by weak or intermediate stresses, which are in fact the chief protection against monotony.

(i) Lines in which there are not five strong stresses are very plentiful; e.g.

Put ran' | cours in' | the ves' | sel of' | my peace' (iii. 1. 66).

In the fifth foot particularly, the stress is very often extremely slight.

(ii) On the other hand, lines in which there are two stressed syllables in one foot are common.

That' I | may tell' | pale' heart' | ed fear' | it lies' (iv. 1. 84).
Balm' of | hurt' minds', | great' na' | ture's se' | cond course' (ii. 2. 39).

A foot with a double stress is nearly always preceded by a pause, or by a foot with a very weak stress only.

(iii) It will be observed that there are never fewer than three strong stresses, and that any foot in which there is no strong stress must at any rate have one syllable with a weak stress, and that very often such a foot has two weak stresses; preventing the feeling that the line is altogether too light. Thus a syllable which is quite unemphatic acquires a certain stress merely by length, as in some of the above cases. And, speaking broadly, a very strong stress in one foot compensates for a weak stress in the neighbouring foot.

§ 5. Irregularities.

(i) Occasionally lines occur with an extra foot; i.e. an additional stress after the normal ten syllables.

Which he' | deserves' | to lose'. | Whe'ther | he was' | combined' (i. 3. 111).

And sometimes there is even an extra syllable added (§ 3 (iv)).

But let' | the frame' | of things' | disjoint', | both' the | worlds' suf'(fer)
(iii. 2. 16).

But this does not often occur in the course of a speech, and when it does there is usually a break in the middle of the line. It is, however, decidedly common in broken dialogue.

Ban. The air | is del | icate

Dun. See, see, | our hon | oured host(ess) (i. 6. 10).

And this is probably often to be explained by the second speaker breaking in on the first, so that one or two syllables are pronounced simultaneously.

(ii) Lines are found, not very frequently, with only four stresses;

Tō thē self' | same' tune' | and words'. | Who's here' ? (i. 3. 88).

(iii) Short incomplete lines of various lengths are also found, especially in broken, hurried, or excited dialogue, and at the beginning or end of a speech. They are especially common in this play. Sometimes the gap may be filled up by appropriate action, or a dramatic pause (e.g. i. 2. 41; ii. 1. 41); but in many cases they are probably due to some mutilation of the text. See, e.g. i. 2. 20, 51; ii. 3. 85; iii. 2. 32, 51.

(iv) Interjections and proper names (especially vocatives), even short questions or commands, are frequently extra-metrical.

Was' not | that no' | bly done' ? (Ay) | and wise' | ly too' (iii. 6. 14).
How goes the night, boy ? (ii. 1. 1).

Cf. ii. 1. 10; ii. 2. 18; ii. 3. 23, etc.

In nearly every instance observe that the unusual stress comes either after a pause, whether at the beginning of a line or in the middle; or at the end of a line in which there is a break.

§ 6. Apparent Irregularities.

(i) Difficulties occasionally arise from the fact that words in Shakespeare's day were sometimes accented in a different way from that of the present day, and sometimes even bear a different accent in different places in Shakespeare's own writing. Thus, we say 'portent', Shakespeare always 'portent'. On the other hand, we say 'complete', Shakespeare has sometimes 'complete' sometimes 'com'plete'. In effect we must often be guided by the verse in deciding on which syllable of a word the accent should fall, because custom had not yet finally decided in favour of a particular syllable. Speaking broadly, the tendency of the modern pronunciation is to throw the accent far back.

(ii) Similarly, when two vowels come together (as in words ending with -ion, -ius, -ious, and the like) we are in the habit of slurring the first, and sometimes of blending it with the preceding consonant; so that we pronounce 'ambit-i-on' 'ambishon'. In Shakespeare the vowel in such cases is sometimes slurred and sometimes not, in the same word in different places; usually the former in the middle of a line, often the latter at the end. In such cases we must be guided simply by ear in deciding whether the vowel is slurred or sounded distinctly. And we have to decide in exactly the same way when we are to sound or not sound the terminal -ed of the past participle.

Thus,

Which smoked | with blood | y ex | ecu | tiön (i. 2. 18).

But,

Is ex | ecu | tiön done | on Caw | dor? Are (not) (i. 4. 1).

(iii) So again in particular words, a vowel seems to be sometimes mute, sometimes sounded. Thus in general (i. 2. 62), interest (i. 2. 69) the e is mute.

So too,

My young | remem | brance can | not par | allel (ii. 3. 43).

But,

Let your | remem | b[e]rance | apply | to Ban(quo) (iii. 2. 30).

(iv) In a large number of words where a liquid (l, m, n, and especially r) comes next to another consonant an indefinite vowel sound is sometimes introduced between the two letters (just as now in many places one may hear the word 'helm' pronounced 'hellum'), which may be treated as forming a syllable, and sometimes the vowel is actually inserted, as in thorough = 'through'.

A somewhat exceptional instance (with p) is

Our cap | [i] tains | Macbeth | and Ban | quo? Yes (i. 2. 34).

(v) Conversely, a light vowel sound coming next a liquid* is often sounded lightly and in effect dropped; so that such words as spirit, peril, quarrel, are practically monosyllables. (Hence such a form as 'parlous' = 'perilous').

Be like | our warrant | ed quarrel. | Why are | you sil(ent) (iii. 4. 137).

(vi) th and v between two vowels are often almost or entirely dropped and the two syllables run into one: as in the words 'whether', 'whither', 'other', 'either', 'ever', 'never', 'even', 'over'. 'Heaven' generally, 'evil', 'devil' sometimes, are treated as monosyllables.

Vowels separated by a w or an h are habitually slurred and pronounced practically as one syllable.

(vii) 'Fire' and similar words which in common pronunciation are dissyllables ('fi-er,' &c.) are commonly but not always scanned as monosyllables.

(viii) Other ordinary contractions, such as 'we'll' for 'we will', th for the before a vowel, &c., though not shown in the spelling, are frequent.

(ix) Glamis, Hecate, Dunsinane.

Glamis would scan best as a monosyllable in i. 3. 116; it might be either a monosyllable or a dissyllable in i. 3. 48, 71; i. 5. 20; elsewhere it must be a dissyllable.

Hecate is almost invariably a dissyllable in Shakespeare, contrary to classical usage.

Dunsinane is accented Duns'inane in iv. 1. 92; elsewhere Dunsinane.

§ 7. Difficult Lines.

(i) Her hus | band's to | Alep | po gone, | master o' | the Ti(ger). i. 3. 7.

This would bring the line under § 5 (i). I know no other instance of a line with seven stresses.

(ii) The cur | tained' | sleep. | Witch | craft cel | ebrates. ii. 1. 51.

But more likely the text is wrong, and we should have—

The cur | tain'd sleep. | Now witch | craft cel | ebrates.

(iii) And be' | times' I | will to' | the weird' | sis'ters. iii. 4. 133.

All the stresses fall very awkwardly here.

§ 8. General Hints.

(i) Often there are many possible ways of scanning a particular line, and the one adopted must depend on the individual taste of the reader. Thus he can frequently choose between § 3 (ii) and § 6 (v).

(ii) Irregularities are most common,

(a) In passages of emotional excitement; e.g. act ii. sc. 2.

(b) Before or after pauses.

(c) Where proper names are introduced.

GLOSSARY.

a-, a-making (iii. 4. 34), a degenerate preposition—'at', 'on', 'of', 'in', prefixed to nouns and to adjectives and participles used as nouns. Cf. Hamlet, ii. 1. 58, "There [he] was a-gaming", with Hamlet, iii. 3. 91, "When he is drunk, a-sleep, or in his rage | at gaming".

a-, a-weary (v. 5. 49), a degenerate form of the A. S. intensive of. So too an in Coriolanus, i. 1. 209, "They were an hungry", and S. Matthew, xxv. 44, "an-hungred".

admire (iii. 4. 110), wonder at; in the sense of the Latin admirari. The more modern sense is also found; cf. Tempest, "Admired Miranda | Indeed the top of admiration".

affection (iv. 3. 77), nature.

affeer'd (iv. 3. 34), confirmed. O. F. afeurer, L. L. adforare, to fix a price (forum, a market).

alarm (v. 2. 4), contest. Ital. all' arme, to arms! Originally it meant 'a call to arms', then 'a sudden attack', and, lastly, 'broil, disturbance', in a more general sense. alarum is really the same word.

an (iii. 6. 19), = and, in the special sense of 'if'. Abbott (Sh. Gr. § 102) supposes the conditional force to lie in the verb introduced by and, but it is more likely that and itself was conditional, either as derived from the Norse enda (Skeat), or through an ellipse (Murray). Thus And you will may = 'And I hope that you will it'. The form an was rarely used in Shakespeare's time. Except, as here, in 'an't', it occurs only once in Fr; but modern editors have appropriated it to the conditional sense of the word. And or An is often strengthened by the addition of if.

anon (i. 1. 10; ii. 3. 22), immediately; A. S. on ðn, lit. 'in one (moment)'.

antic (iv. 1. 130), fantastic; derived by Murray from Ital. antico, a cavern adorned with grotesques; but it may also be 'old', and therefore 'quaint'; cf. Hamlet, v. 2. 352, "an antic Roman", with Hamlet, i. 5. 172, "I'll put an antic disposition on".

approve (i. 6. 4), prove.

aroint (i. 3. 6), in the phrase "Aroint thee" (cf. Lear, iii. 4. 129), 'begone'. Skeat explains this as a corruption of prov. E. (Cheshire) rynt thee, i.e. 'get out of the way'; the Icel. ryma, 'make room, clear the way', connected with E. room. More fanciful derivations may be found in Furness's 'Variorum' Macbeth.

assay (iv. 3. 143), attempt.

audit (i. 6. 27), account; Lat. audire, to hear.

augure (iii. 4. 124). Either 'augury' or 'augur'; it was evidently used in both senses. The Clarendon Press editors state that Shakespeare always uses augurer for 'augur'; but cf. Sonnet cvii. "The sad augurs mock their own presage".

avaunt (iii. 4. 93), begone; Fr. en avant, forward.

avouch (iii. 1. 120; v. 5. 47), assert.

baby (iii. 4. 106), (1) infant, (2) doll. This latter use is not found elsewhere in Shakespeare, but it occurs in Jonson and Sidney; and Florio (Ital. Dict.) translates "Pupa: a baby or puppet like a girle".

badge, vb. (ii. 3. 107), mark, as with a badge.

battle (v. 6. 4), division of an army; cf. 3 Henry VI. i. 1. 8; Henry V. iv. 3. 69; Cæsar, v. 1. 4; 3. 108.

beldame (iii. 5. 2), old woman; a term of contempt; Fr. belle dame, used ironically.

benison (ii. 4. 40), blessing; Lat. benedictio.

betimes (iii. 4. 133), early. Be is a form of by; when used as a prefix, it intensifies, or in some similar way modifies the sense of the word to which it is attached. Thus betimes is 'in good time'.

bladed (iv. 1. 55), in the green ear; cf. note ad loc.

boltered (iv. 1. 123), clotted, matted; a Warwickshire phrase, lit. 'swollen', 'round', 'lumpy', from the same root as ball. Cf. the phrase "their bolstered hair" in Arden of Feversham.

bonfire (ii. 3. 22); lit. 'a bone-fire'; the Lat. pyrus or roga.

borne (iii. 6. 3, 17), carried on; cf. Cæsar, ii. 1. 226, "Bear it as our Roman actors do".

bosom, adj. (i. 2. 64), dear, intimate; cf. Merchant of Venice, iii. 4. 17, "the bosom lover of my lord".

botch (iii. 1. 134), patch; of unskilful work; so the vb. in Timon of Athens, iv. 3. 285, "'T is not well mended so, it is but botched".

brinded (iv. 1. 1), streaked; lit. 'branded, marked with a flame', from Scand. brandr, flame. The more modern form, brindled, does not occur in Shakespeare.

bruitied (v. 7. 22), noised abroad.

censure (v. iv. 14), opinion.

chaudron (iv. 1. 33), entrails.

chuck (iii. 2. 45), chicken; a common term of endearment.

clear (i. 7. 18; ii. 1. 28), innocent.

clepe (iii. 1. 94), call, name; A. S. cleopian. The word, so common in Chaucer, is rare in Elizabethan English. Shakespeare uses it again in Love's Labour's Lost, v. 1. 24; Hamlet, i. 4. 19; Venus and Adonis, 995.

cling (v. 5. 40), shrivel up, wither; A. S. clingan. The word is found in the dialects of N. and E. English; it is generally used intransitively.

close (iii. 5. 6), secret.

coign (i. 6. 7), corner; Fr. coing, Lat. cuneus, lit. 'wedge'. Coin is from the same word, because coins were stamped with wedges (Skeat).

commends (i. 7. 11), delivers.

composition (i. 2. 59), terms; Compound is similarly used; cf. Taming of the Shrew, i. 2. 27, "compound this quarrel".

compt (i. 6. 26), account. In compt is 'subject to account'.

convince (i. 7. 64; iv. 3. 142), overcome, vanquish; in the radical, but not the classical sense of the Latin convincere.

cribbed (iii. 4. 24), confined; crib is (1) 'manger', (2) 'hovel', cf. 2 Henry IV. iii. 1. 9, "Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs". So cribbed is synonymous with cabined.

dear (v. 2. 3) is used of anything that touches deeply, even if it yields pain rather than pleasure; cf. Richard II. i. 3. 151, "my dear exile"; King John, i. 1. 257, "my dear offence"; Hamlet, i. 2. 182, "my dearest foe".

demi-wolf (iii. 1. 93), a mongrel bred between a dog and a wolf.

drab (iv. 1. 31), harlot.

dudgeon (ii. 1. 46), hilt; "dudgeon-hafted" means that the haft was curiously worked or ornamented; dudgin means covered with waving marks. Etym. unknown" (Skeat).

ecstasy (iii. 2. 22; iv. 3. 170), any abnormal state, whether of rapture, excitement, trance or madness; lit. 'a being beside oneself'; from O. F. ecstase, L. L. ecstasis, Gk. ekstasis (ix, out; stasis, standing).

egg (iv. 2. 83), a taunt used to a boy, as being immature. So in Troilus and Cressida, v. 1. 41, Patroclus is called "finch-egg"; and Moth in Love's Labour's Lost, v. 1. 77, "thou pigeon-egg of discretion".

epicure (v. 3. 8), lover of luxury, glutton; cf. Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 7. 58, and the similar use of epicurism in Lear, i. 4. 265.

faculty (i. 7. 17), power, prerogative. The nearest approach to this sense is Henry VIII. i. 2. 73, "ignorant tongues, which neither know | My faculties nor person"; but here faculties may mean 'qualities'.

fantastical (i. 3. 53), imaginary: so fantastic in Richard II. i. 3. 299, "In thinking on fantastic summer's heat".

farrow (iv. 1. 65), litter of pigs; A. S. feorh, connected with Lat. porcus, Eng. pork.

favour (i. 5. 73), countenance.

fee-grief (iv. 3. 196), a peculiar private grief. Land held 'in fee' is practically land held as private property, for ever. So in Troilus and Cressida, iii. 2. 53, "a kiss in fee-farm" is a kiss of long duration. A. S. feoh, cattle, property, connected with Lat. pecus, pecunia.

fell, adj. (iv. 2. 71), savage, cruel.

fell, subst. (v. 5. 11), scalp, skin, the Lat. pellis.

file (iii. 1. 95, 102; v. 2. 8), list.

flaw (iii. 4. 63), sudden disturbance; cf. Measure for Measure, ii. 3. 11, "the flaws of her own youth". Lit. 'a gust of wind'; Dyce quotes from Smith's Sea Grammar (1627), "A flaw of wind is a gust, which is very violent upon a sudden, but quickly endeth". So 'the winter's flaw' in Hamlet, v. 1. 239.

foison (iv. 3. 88), rich harvest; O. F. foison, Lat. fusio, pouring-out, profusion.

gallow-glass (i. 2. 13), a heavy-armed Irish soldier. Furness quotes Coke On Justinian, 4 Inst. 358, "Gallowglasses, equites triarii, qui securibus utuntur acutissimis". Cf. 2 Henry VI. iv. 9. 25—

"a puissant and a mighty power
Of Gallowglasses and stout Irish kerns".

germen (iv. 1. 59), seed; cf. Lear, iii. 2. 8, "Crack nature's moulds, all germens spill at once | That make ingrateful man".

goodness (iv. 3. 136), success; cf. Measure for Measure, iii. 2. 228, "Bliss and goodness on you". Good is often so used.

gouts (ii. 1. 46), drops; Fr. goutte, Lat. gutta.

graymalkin (i. 1. 8), the name of a cat; cf. iv. 1. 1, "the brinded cat". Malkin is a diminutive of Mary. It is used for a servant-girl in Coriolanus, ii. 1. 224; Pericles, iv. 3. 34. The Clarendon Press editors say that maukin is used for a hare in Scotland.

gulf (iv. 1. 23), stomach; cf. Coriolanus, i. 1. 107, where the belly is accused "that only like a gulf it did remain | I' the midst o' the body". The word is connected with the vb. to gulp.

harbinger (i. 4. 45; v. 6. 10), forerunner; M. E. herbergeour, O. F. herberg-er, one who provided lodgings for a man of rank.

harness (v. 5. 52), armour.

harp (iv. 1. 74), touch, hit upon; as a harp is struck with the fingers.

hoodwink (iv. 3. 72), blindfold; probably a metaphor from falconry; hawks were 'hooded' when not in use.

housekeeper (iii. 1. 97), house-dog. The name occurs, amongst those of other species of dogs in Topsell's History of Beasts (1658).

hurly-burly (i. 1. 3), tumult; a reduplicated form of hurly; cf. King John, iii. 4. 169, "Methinks I see this hurly all on foot". 'Hurly' is from the Fr. hurler, and connected with the E. howl, and Lat. ululare. The root is onomatopoeic in origin.

'ild (i. 6. 13), in the phrase "God 'ild you". Probably a corruption of 'God yield you', though Johnson took it for 'God shield you'. Hunter quotes God yelde you from Palsgrave's Fr. and Eng. Dict. The form God dild you occurs in Sir John Oldcastle (1600).

incarnadine (ii. 2. 62), redden. The word is used as an adj. by Carew, Obsequies to the Lady Anne Hay, "a fourth, incarnadine, thy rosy cheek"; and by Sylvester, of the phoenix—

"Her wings and train of feathers
mixed fine

Of orient azure and incarnadine".

inhabit (iii. 4. 105), abide; often used intransitively.

intrenchant (v. 8. 10), indivisible; so entrench, 'divide', in All's Well, ii. 1. 45, "This very sword entrenched it".

jutty (i. 6. 6), projection; also used as a vb.; cf. Henry V. iii. 1. 13, "as doth a galled rock | O'erhang and jutty his confounded base".

kerns (i. 2. 13; v. 7. 27), light-armed Irish soldiers; from the Irish ceatharnach, soldier. The word is generally contemptuous; cf. Richard II. ii. 1. 156, "rough rug-headed kerns", and Henry VI. iii. 1. 367, "a shag-haired, crafty kern". It is explained in Coke On Justinian, 4 Inst. 358, "kernes sunt pedites qui iaculis utuntur".

lapped (i. 2. 54), wrapped up. clad; cf. Cymbeline, v. 5. 360, "Lapped in a most curious mantle".

latch (iv. 3. 195), catch, seize; M. E. lacchen, A. S. laccan: so 'a latch' is the 'catch' or fastening of a door. The word is used, in slightly different senses, in Midsummer Night's Dream, iii. 2. 36, and Sonnet ciii.

lavish (i. 2. 57), unrestrained.

limbec (i. 7. 67), alembic, still; a term of Arabian alchemy, for the vessel in which chemicals were vaporized, from Arab. al, 'the,' and Gk. λεβητις, 'cup, cap of a still'. Limbec is merely a corruption of alembic.

line (i. 3. 112), fill, supply; with food, as in As You Like It, ii. 7. 154, "with good capon lined"; or with money, as in Cymbeline, ii. 3. 72, "If I do line one of their hands" (so in the familiar gipsy phrase, 'Line it with silver, good lady', where there is no allusion to the 'lines' of palmistry); or as here with aid or strength: cf. Henry IV. ii. 3. 86; Henry V. ii. 4. 7, "to line and new repair our towns of war"; King John, ii. 352, "O, now doth Death line his deal chips with steel".

lodge (iv. 1. 55), beat down, lay. Cf. Richard II. iii. 3. 162, "Our sighs and they shall lodge the summer's corn".

loon (v. 3. 11), an expression of contempt. The word may be lit. 'slow, awkward' and be akin to lame, or it may be a corruption of dom, the name of a diving-bird, and so be parallel to booby, goose, gull, owl. (Skeat.)

luxurious (iv. 3. 58), lustful.

magot pie (iii. 4. 125), magpie. Mag or Magot is for the Fr. Margot, Marguerite; pie, Fr. pie, is the Lat. pica, magpie.

martlet (i. 6. 4), martin; M. E. martnet, corruption of martinet, dim. of Fr. martin. Martlet is the usual heraldic term for the bird. Cf. Merchant of Venice, ii. 9. 28—“like the martlet,

Builds in the weather on the outward wall”.

mate (v. 1. 86), subdue, con-found, a term of chess, originally derived from the Arabic; thus check-mate is shāh māt, ‘the king is dead’. Cf. Venus and Adonis, 509, “Her more than haste is mated with delays”; Comedy of Errors, v. 281, “I think you are all mated or stark mad”.

maw (iv. i. 23), stomach.

metaphysical (i. 5. 30), supernatural. The word does not occur elsewhere in Shakespeare, and metaphysics in Taming of the Shrew, i. 1. 37, is ‘philosophy’, in Aristotle’s sense of the word. But cf. The Puritan, ii. 1, “metaphysically and by a supernatural intelligence”. And Marlowe, Dr. Faustus, i. 1. 47—

“These metaphysics of magicians
And necromantic books are heavenly”.

mettle (i. 7. 73), substance, temper; another form of metal: no distinction is made between the two words in old editions, either in spelling or in use. (Schmidt.)

minion (i. 2. 19; ii. 4. 15), favourite; Fr. mignon, dainty, pleasing.

modern (iv. 3. 170). commonplace, trite; cf. As You Like It, ii. 7. 156, “wise saws and modern instances”. The word seems to have a sense akin to that of moderate, i.e. ‘keeping within measure’. The present sense of it is rather ‘modish’, ‘in the mode, or fashion’.

monkey (iv. 2. 58), a term of endearment for a child. The nearest parallel is Romeo and Juliet, ii. 1. 16, where Mercutio says of Romeo, “The ape is dead and I must conjure him”. In The Tempest, iii. 2. 52, monkey is a term of reproach, used by Caliban to Ariel.

mortal (iii. 4. 81; iv. 3. 3), death-dealing.

nave (i. 2. 22), navel.

nice (iv. 3. 174), elaborate.

nonpareil (iii. 4. 19), one who has no equal; Fr. non, not; pareil, equal.

note: (1) (iii. 2. 44; v. 7. 21), distinction; (2) (iii. 3. 10), list, memorandum.

notion (iii. 1. 83), mind; cf. Lear, i. 4. 248, “His notion weakens, his discernings are lethargied”.

owe: (1) (v. 4. 18), owe as a debt; (2) (i. 4. 10; v. 4. 18), a shorter form of own (ow-e-n).

paddock (i. 1. 9), toad; so in Hamlet, iii. 4. 190. The word is also used in various parts of England for a frog.

pall (i. 5. 49), wrap up.

palter (v. 8. 20), equivocate.

patch (v. 3. 15), fool; so called from the motley dress of the professional fool: cf. The Tempest, iii. 2. 71, “What a pied ninny’s this! thou scurvy patch”; and Midsummer Night’s Dream, iv. 1. 237, “Man is but a patched fool”. Others derive it from Ital. pazzo, connected with Lat. fatuus, foolish. Mr. Skeat derives the pajock of Hamlet, iii. 2. 295, from patch.

peak (i. 3. 23), grow thin.

pester (v. 2. 23), annoy.

point (iv. 3. 135), summit of perfection, in the phrase at a point, i.e. perfectly ready.

posset (ii. 2. 6), a hot thick drink, generally made of curdled milk; the phrase 'eat a posset' occurs in Merry Wives, v. 5. 180.

poster (i. 3. 33), speedy traveller; post is the common form; lit. one who takes relays of horses at every post.

power (v. 2. 1; 6. 7), armed force.

present (i. 2. 64), immediate.

profound (iii. 5. 24), either 'deep, heavy', or 'full of occult properties'; cf. As You Like It, v. 2. 67, "a magician most profound in his art, and yet not damnable".

proof (i. 2. 54), armour that has been proved or tested; cf. Richard III. v. 3. 218, "Ten thousand soldiers armed in proof". So proof comes to mean merely 'strength': cf. Richard II. i. 3. 73, "Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers"; Hamlet, ii. 2. 512, "Mars' armour, forged for proof eterne".

proper (iii. 4. 60), an ironical epithet; cf. Much Ado, iv. 1. 311, "Talk with a man out at a window! A proper saying!"

purveyor (i. 6. 22), a man sent before to prepare lodging and provision.

push (v. 3. 20), attack; cf. Julius Caesar, v. 2. 5, "Sudden push gives them the overthrow"; 1 Henry IV. iii. 2. 66, "Stand the push | of every beardless vain comparative".

quarry (iv. 3. 206, cf. i. 2. 14, note), a heap of dead game; Fr. curée, the entrails given to the hounds; a technical term of sport.

quell (i. 7. 72), victory.

ravel (ii. 2. 37), loosen; woven or twisted things are said to 'ravel' when the strands part; cf. Richard II. iv. 1. 288, "Must I ravel out | my weaved up follies?"

ravin (ii. 4. 28), devour greedily; Fr. ravine, plunder, Lat. rapina. So the adj. ravined (iv. 1. 24), ravenous.

repeat (iv. 3. 112), tell.

ronyon (i. 3. 6), a term of abuse; lit. 'scabby, mangy', the Fr. rogneux; cf. Merry Wives, iv. 2. 195, "You baggage, you polecat, you ronyon". An adj. formed from the word occurs in As You Like It, ii. 2. 8, "the roynish clown".

rooky (iii. 2. 51), murky, foggy; connected with reek and the Scotch reuk, 'smoke'. It might also perhaps be interpreted 'full of rooks'.

rub (iii. 1. 134), roughness; lit. an inequality in the ground, on a bowling-green; cf. Hamlet, iii. 1. 65, "To sleep, perchance to dream; ay, there's the rub"; and for the literal sense, Richard II. iii. 4. 4—

"T will make me think the world is full of rubs,
And that my fortune runs against the bias".

sag (v. 3. 10), sink down; from weakness, or an overload.

saucy: (1) (iii. 4. 25), unbounded; (2) (iii. 5. 3), impudent; lit. 'pungent', from Lat. salsus, salt.

scotch (iii. 2. 13), cut, notch; as with a whip. The vb. scutch is 'to dress flax, by beating it slightly'; cf. Coriolanus, iv. 5. 198, "He scotched him and notched him like a carbonado" (meat cut across for broiling). So the noun in Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 7. 10, "I have yet room for six scotches (wounds) more".

seeling (iii. 2. 46), blinding: a term of falconry; Fr. siller or ciller, Lat. cilium, eyelid. Hawks were tamed by sewing up their eyes till they were tractable.

self, originally an adj. = 'same' (connected with Germ. selbe). The word was added to the oblique cases of pronouns to identify the object with the subject. Thus 'He killed himself' = 'He killed him' (the same him). Shakespeare uses the word practically as an adjective, denoting all shades of reference to the subject. Thus self-comparisons (i. 2. 55), 'comparisons between himself and his enemy'; 'Self and strange abuse' (iii. 4. 142); 'abuse of self'; 'Self and violent hands' (v. 8. 70), 'hands laid on self'. Cf. Richard II. iii. 2. 166, "Infusing him with self and vain conceit".

sennet (iii. 1. 11), a particular 'call' or set of notes on the trumpet. The word is not used in the text of Shakespeare; it is also spelt Senet, Synnet, Cynet, Signet, Sig-nate.

sere (v. 3. 23), dry.

sewer (i. 7. 1), an officer who serves at table. According to some, from Fr. asseour, 'placer' (Steevens), or essayeur, 'taster' (Clarendon Press); according to others from M.E. sewen, 'set meat', sew, 'boiled meat' (Skeat). Holinshed uses the verb 'to sew'.

shag-haired (iv. 2. 83), shaggy, rough-haired, coarse-haired. The word occurs again in 2 Henry VI. iii. 1. 67.

shard-borne (iii. 2. 42), born on shards or scaly wing-cases. So in Cymbeline, iii. 3. 20, "the sharded beetle". Shard is (1) 'a wing-case', as in Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 2. 20, "They are his shards and he their beetle"; (2) 'a fragment of pottery', as in Hamlet, v. 1. 254, "Shards, flints, and pebbles should be thrown upon her".

shough (iii. 1. 94), a species of dog; cf. Nash, Lenten Stuff (1599), "A trundle-tail, tyke, or shough or two".

sirrah (iii. 1. 45; iv. 2. 30), a term of contempt, said to be from Icel. sirra; but in the 13th century it was in use as a variant of sir, from the Lat. senior. (Skeat.)

skirr (v. 3. 35), move rapidly, scour. Again in Henry V. iv. 7. 64.

slab (iv. 1. 32), thick.

sleave (ii. 2. 37), tangled, knotted silk, often called floss-silk: Scand. sleff, a knot of ribbon. Cf. Troilus and Cressida, v. 1. 35, "Thou idle immaterial skein of sleeve-silk".

sliver (iv. 1. 28), break off (of twigs); cf. Lear, iv. 2. 34, "She that herself will sliver and disbranch | from her material sap". Sliver occurs as a subst. in Hamlet, iv. 7. 174, "The envious sliver broke".

solemn (iii. 1. 14), ceremonious.

sooth (v. 5. 40), truth.

state (iii. 4. 5) (1), a canopy; (2) as here, 'a canopied chair'; cf. Coriolanus, v. 4. 22, "He sits in his state as a thing made for Alexander".

still (iii. 1. 21; v. 8. 15), constantly.

sudden (iv. 3. 59), passionate; cf. Othello, ii. 1. 279, "He is rash and very sudden in choler".

surcease (i. 7. 4), stop, a euphemism for 'death'; so the vb. in Lucrece, 1766, "If they surcease to be that should survive".

swelter (iv. 1. 8), exude.

thane (i. 2. 45, &c.), lord; = thegn, a Saxon title of honour.

top (iv. 3. 57), surpass.

trains (iv. 3. 118), tricks. The vb. is frequently so used; e.g. in Comedy of Errors, iii. 2. 45, "Train me with thy note, to drown me".

trammel (i. 7. 3), either 'catch or clog'; trammel is both a net for small birds, and a strap or rope fastening a horse's legs together.

unrough (v. 2. 10), beardless.

use (i. 3. 137), habit.

utterance (iii. 1. 72), extremity; Fr. outrance. A combat à l'outrance was one which only ended with the death of one of the parties.

visard (iii. 2. 34), mask.

warranted (iv. 3. 137), justified.

wassail (i. 7. 64), revelry; A. S. waes hael, 'be of health'; cf. Hamlet, i. 4. 9, "takes his rouse, keeps wassail".

water-rugs (iii. 1. 94), rough-haired water-dogs. Rug is connected etymologically with rough.

weal (iii. 4. 76; v. 2. 27), state.

weird (i. 3. 32, &c.), connected with fate; A. S. wyrd, destiny, weorðan, become, happen.

worm (iii. 4. 29), serpent; especially one of small size; so in Antony and Cleopatra, v. 2. 242, an asp is called "the pretty worm of Nilus".

wrack (v. 5. 51), wreck; always so spelt in the Qq. and Ff.

yawning (iii. 2. 43), sleepy; cf. Henry V. i. 2. 204, "the lazy, yawning drone".

yesty (iv. 1. 53), frothy; so the noun yest in Winter's Tale, iii. 3. 94, "the ship ... anon swallowed with yest and froth".

SHAKESPEARE'S STAGE IN ITS BEARING UPON HIS DRAMA

§ 1. The structure and arrangements of the Elizabethan theatre are still under discussion, and many points of detail remain unsettled. A very extensive and highly technical literature on the subject is available, chiefly in England, America, and Germany. It is based especially on the new evidence derived from (1) the original stage directions, (2) contemporary illustrations and descriptions. The following summary gives the conclusions which at present appear most reasonable, neglecting much speculative matter of great interest.

§ 2. When Shakespeare arrived in London, soon after 1585, theatrical exhibitions were given there in (1) public theatres, (2) private theatres, (3) the halls of the royal palaces, and of the Inns of Court.

Of the 'public' theatres there were at least three: The Theater, the Curtain, both in Shoreditch, and Newington Butts on the Bankside or Southwark shore. About 1587, the Rose, also on the Bankside, was added. All these were occasionally used by Shakespeare's company before 1599, when their headquarters became the newly built Globe, likewise on the Bankside. Of the 'private' theatres the principal, and the oldest, was the Blackfriar, on the site of the present Times office. It was also the property of the company in which Shakespeare acquired a share, but being let out during practically his whole career, does not count in the present connexion. At court, on the other hand, his company played repeatedly. But his plays were written for the 'public' theatre, and this alone had any influence in his stage-craft.

§ 3. The 'public' theatre differed from the other two types chiefly in being (1) dependent on daylight, (2) open overhead, and (3) partially seatless; and from the court-stages also, in (4) not using painted scenes. While they, again, had the rectangular form, the typical 'public' theatre was a round or octagonal edifice, modelled partly on the inn-yards where companies of players had been accustomed to perform, prior to the inhibition of 1574, on movable stages; partly on the arenas used for bear-baiting and cock-fighting;—sports still carried on in the 'theatres', and in part dictating their arrangements.

The circular inner area, known thence as the 'cock-pit', or 'pit', had accordingly no seats: admission to it cost one penny (6d. in modern money), and the throng of standing spectators were known as the 'groundlings'. More expensive places (up to 2s. 6d.) with seats, were provided in tiers of galleries which ran round the area, one above the other, as in modern theatres; the uppermost being covered with a thatched roof.

§ 4. The Stage (using the term to describe the entire scenic apparatus of the theatre) included (1) the outer stage, a rectangular platform (as much as 42 feet wide in the largest examples) projecting into the circular area, from the back wall, and thus surrounded by 'groundlings' on three sides. Above it were a thatched roof and hangings but no side or front curtains. In the floor was a trap-door by which ghosts and others ascended or descended. At the back were (2) two projecting wings, each with a door opening obliquely on to the stage, the recess between them, of uncertain shape and extent, forming a kind of inner stage. Above this was (3) an upper room or rooms, which included the actors' 'tiring house', with a window or windows opening on to (4) a balcony or gallery from which was hung (5) a curtain, by means of which the inner recess could be concealed or disclosed.

§ 5. The most important divergence of this type of structure from that of our theatres is in the relation between the outer stage and the auditorium. In the modern theatre the play is treated as a picture, framed in the proscenium arch, seen by the audience like any other picture from the front only, and shut off from their view at any desired moment by letting fall the curtain. An immediate consequence of this was that a scene (or act) could terminate only in one of two ways. Either the persons concerned in it walked, or were carried, off the stage; or a change of place and circumstances was supposed without their leaving it. Both these methods were used. The first was necessary only at the close of the play. For this reason an Elizabethan play rarely ends on a climax such as the close of Ibsen's Ghosts; the overpowering effect of which would be gravely diminished if, instead of the curtain falling upon Oswald's helpless cry for "the sun", he and his mother had to walk off the stage. Marlowe's Faustus ends with a real climax, because the catastrophe ipso facto leaves the stage clear. But the close of even the most overwhelming final scenes of Shakespeare is relatively quiet, or even, as in Macbeth, a little tame. The concluding lines often provide a motive for the (compulsory) clearing of the stage.

In the Tragedies, the dead body of the hero has usually to be borne ceremoniously away, followed by the rest; so Aufidius in Coriolanus: "Help, three o' the chiefest soldiers: I'll be one". Similarly in Hamlet and King Lear. In Othello, Desdemona's bed was apparently in the curtained recess, and at the close the curtains were drawn upon the two bodies, instead of their being as usual borne away.

The close of the Histories often resembles the dispersing of an informal council after a declaration of policy by the principal person; thus Richard II. closes with Bolingbroke's announcement of the penance he proposes to pay for Richard's death; Henry IV. with his orders for the campaign against Northumberland and Glendower; King John with Falconbridge's great assertion of English patriotism. In the Comedies, the leading persons will often withdraw to explain to one another at leisure what the audience already knows (Winter's Tale, Tempest, Merchant of Venice), or to carry out the wedding rites (As You Like It, Midsummer-Night's Dream); or they strike up a measure and thus (as in Much Ado) naturally dance off the stage. Sometimes the chief persons have withdrawn before the close, leaving some minor character—Puck (Midsummer-Night's Dream) or the Clown (Twelfth Night)—to wind up the whole with a snatch of song, and then retire himself.

§ 6. But the most important result of the exposed stage was that it placed strict limit upon dramatic illusion, and thus compelled the resort, for most purposes, to conventions resting on symbolism, suggestion, or make-believe. It was only in dress that anything like simulation could be attempted; and here the Elizabethan companies, as is well known, were lavish in the extreme. Painted scenes, on the other hand, even had they been available, would have been idle or worse, when perhaps a third of the audience would see, behind the actors, not the scenes but the people in the opposite gallery, or the gallants seated on the stage. Especially where complex and crowded actions were introduced, the most beggarly symbolic suggestion was cheerfully accepted. Jonson, in the spirit of classical realism, would have tabooed all such intractable matter; and he scoffed, in his famous Prologue, at the "three rusty swords" whose clashing had to do duty for "York and Lancaster's long jars". Shakespeare's realism was never of this literal kind, but in bringing Agincourt upon the stage of the newly built Globe in the following year (1559) he showed himself so far sensitive to criticisms of this type that he expressly appealed to the audience's imagination—"eke out our imperfections with your thoughts"—consenting, moreover, to assist them by the splendid descriptive passages interposed between the Acts.

It is probable that the Elizabethan popular audience did not need any such appeal. It had no experience of elaborate 'realism' on the stage; the rude movable stages on which the earliest dramas had been played compelled an ideal treatment of space and a symbolic treatment of properties; and this tradition, though slowly giving way, was still paramount throughout Shakespeare's career. Thus every audience accepted as a matter of course (1) the representation of distant things or places simultaneously on the stage. Sidney, in 1580, had ridiculed the Romantic plays of his time with "Asia of one side and Africa of the other", indicated by labels. But Shakespeare in 1593-4 could still represent the tents of Richard III. and Richmond within a few yards of one another, and the Ghosts speaking alternately to each. Every audience accepted (2) the presence on the stage, in full view of the audience, of accessories irrelevant to the scene in course of performance. A property requisite for one set of scenes, but out of place in another, could be simply ignored while the latter were in progress; just as the modern audience sees, but never reckons into the scenery, the footlights and the prompter's box. Large, movable objects, such as beds or chairs, were no doubt often brought in when needed; but no one was disturbed if they remained during an intervening scene in which they were out of place. And "properties either difficult to move, like a well, or so small as to be unobtrusive, were habitually left on the stage as long as they were wanted, whatever scenes intervened" (Reynolds).

Thus in Jonson's The Case is Altered (an early play, not yet reflecting his characteristic technique), Jaques, in III. 2, hides his gold in the earth and covers it with a heap of dung to avoid suspicion. In IV. 4, he removes the dung to assure himself that the gold is still there. The intervening scenes represent rooms in Fernese's palace, and Juniper's shop; but the heap of dung doubtless remained on the stage all the time. Similarly in Peele's David and Bethsabe, the spring in which Bethsabe bathes; and in his Old Wives' Tale, 'a study' and a 'cross', which belong to unconnected parts of the action.

It follows from this that the supposed locality of a scene could be changed without any change in the properties on the stage, or even of the persons. What happened was merely that some properties which previously had no dramatic relevance, suddenly acquired it, and vice versa; that a tree, for instance, hitherto only a stage property out of use, became a tree and signified probably, a wood. The change of scene may take place without any break in the dialogue, and be only marked by the occurrence of allusions of a different tenor.

Thus in Doctor Faustus, at v. 1106 f., Faustus is in "a fair and pleasant green", on his way from the Emperor's Court at Wittenberg; at v. 1143 f., he is back in his house there. In Romeo and Juliet, I. 4. 5, Romeo and his friends are first in the street; at I. 4. 114, according to the Folio, "they march about the stage and serving-men come forth with their napkins"; in other words, we are now in Capulet's hall, and Capulet presently enters meeting his guests. This is conventionalized in modern editions.

§ 7. The Inner Stage.—An audience for which the limitations of the actual stage meant so little, might be expected to dispense readily with the concessions to realism implied in providing an actual inner chamber for scenes performed 'within', and an actual gallery for those performed 'aloft'. And the importance and number of the former class of scenes have, in fact, been greatly exaggerated.

Applying modern usages to the semi-medieval Elizabethan stage, Brandl (Einführung to his revised edition of Schlegel's translation) and Brodmeyer (Dissertation on the stage conditions of the Elizabethan drama), put forward the theory of the 'alternative' scene; according to which the inner and the outer stage were used 'alternately', a recurring scene, with elaborate properties, being arranged in the former, and merely curtailed off while intervening scenes were played on the outer, or main stage. But while this theory is plausible, as applied to some of Shakespeare's plays (e.g. the intricate transitions between rooms at Belmont and piazzas at Venice, in the Merchant), it breaks down in others (e.g. Cymbeline, II. 2. 3; Richard II., I. 3. 4), and especially in many plays by other dramatists.

It is probable that the use of the 'inner stage' was in general restricted to two classes of scene: (1) where persons 'within' formed an integral though subordinate part of a scene of which the main issue was decided on the outer stage; as with the play-scene in Hamlet, or where Ferdinand and Miranda are discovered playing chess in The Tempest; (2) where a scene, though engaging the whole interest, is supposed to occur in an inner chamber. Thus Desdemona's chamber, Prospero's cell, Timon's cave, Lear's hovel, the Capulet's tomb.

§ 8. The Balcony.—There is less doubt about the use of the balcony or gallery. This was in fact an extremely favourite resource, and its existence in part explains the abundance of serenade, rope-ladder, and other upper-story scenes in Elizabethan drama.

From the balcony, or the window above it, Juliet discoursed with Romeo, and Sylvia with Proteus (Two Gentlemen of Verona, IV. 2); Richard III. addressed the London citizens, and the citizen of Angers the rival Kings. From the window the Pedant in Taming of the Shrew, V. 1, hails Petruchio and Grumio below; and Squire Tub, in Jonson's Tale of a Tub, I. 1, puts out his head in answer to the summons of Parson Hugh. But whole scenes were also, it is probable, occasionally enacted in this upper room. This is the most natural interpretation of the scenes in Juliet's chamber (IV. 3. 5). On the other hand, though the Senators in Titus Andronicus, I. 1, "go up into the 'Senate House'", it is probable that the debate later in the scene, on the main stage, is intended to be in the Senate-house by the convention described in § 6.
